'Open Letter' Starts Draft Of Wallace In California

Left-Wing Democrat Convention Hears Kenny Make Attack On Truman Policy

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Reporter

Fresno, Calif., July 19.—A campaign to elect Henry A. Wallace to the presidency in 1948 was launched formally in California's "Grapes of Wrath" country today.

Left-wing Democrats, apparently with Wallace's consent and in the face of warnings that they were jeopardizing President Truman's chances of election next year, set out to capture the Democratic Party in California and later on in other States.

They agreed to work for the election of a slate of delegates pledged to support Wallace for the presidential nomination at the Democratic National Convention in '48. Political apparatus was set up to put this slate before the voters in California's preferential primary next year.

"Open Letter" to Wallace

The actual launching of the Wallace-for-President boom came when the left-wingers went to work on an "open letter to Henry Wallace." The draft of this said:

"We pledge to you that we will mobilize the Democratic voters of the State of California and send a delegation to the Democratic National Convention in 1948, committed unequivocally and without compromise to your candidacy for President.

"We further promise that we will fight simultaneously to insure election of a bloc of progressive Democrats pledged to back your program for peace, jobs and democracy when Congress convenes on January 1, 1949.

"With your leadership, the 1948 conventions and elections shall return this Government to the people and continue it in the progressive course charted by Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Seek 100,000 Signers

The plan was to get 100,000 signatures to the open letter and present to Wallace on his birthday, October 8, 1947.

Robert W. Kenny, mainspring of the "Democrats for Wallace" organization and keynoter at today's caucus in torrid Fresno, made a down-the-line attack on President Truman, excoriating his every move to check communism abroad and at home.

Kenny denounced the Truman doctrine to halt Russian expansionism and accused the Chief Executive of leading a "pack of witchburners" with his "loyalty check" of Government employes.

"We cannot win with Truman, because Mr. Truman already has chloroformed the independent voters," Kenny said. "We can win with Wallace; the dreamers are not the Wallace backers, but the people who think Truman can be propped up and held together by baling wire."

Auditorium Too Large

The setting for today's caucus was the ballroom of the Fresno Hotel. Mercifully it was air-conditioned, for outside this city the San Joaquin Valley roasted in a temperature of around 100 degrees.

Originally, the caucus was

40 Hurt, 1 Killed In Two Collisions Of Trucks, Buses

By The Associated Press

Twenty-eight persons were injured near Sycamore, Ill., in a highway crash involving a bus, two trailer trucks and a passenger automobile. The trucks brushed while one was attempting to pass the other. One of the truck units went out of control, jackknifed across the highway and was struck by the eastbound bus and the automobile.

One man was killed and 12 persons were hospitalized as the result of a collision near Superior, Ariz., between a Greyhound bus and two large trucks yesterday morning. None of the 10 bus passengers was critically hurt, although all suffered cuts and bruises.

Dead is Forrest S. Lane, 28, of Miami, Ariz., a passenger on the truck.

Bill Goes to Truman

Senate Votes Cashing Of Leave Bonds Sept. 1

The Senate yesterday passed, 85 to 0, and sent to the White House a bill permitting World War II veterans to cash $1,800,000,000 in bonds for terminal leave pay.

The bill previously had passed the House by a vote of 386 to 0.

On other legislation pertaining to veterans, the Senate took these actions:

1. Passed and sent to the House a measure to increase living allowances for veterans attending school under the GI Bill of Rights. Passage was by a voice vote.

2. Passed and sent to President Truman a bill providing a 20 per cent increase in pensions of veterans of the Civil and Spanish-American wars and their widows and children. The vote was 73 to 0.

3. Approved by voice vote and sent to the House legislation to renew for three years and liberalize the program of providing automobiles for disabled veterans. The Government would pay up to $1600 on the cost of a car for a veteran who had lost the use of one or both feet or one or both hands, or had suffered permanent impairment of vision.

4. Voted 40 to 37 to send back to the Banking Committee for further study a bill to provide special housing for disabled veterans. Under the measure, the Government would provide half the cost up to $10,000, for building special homes for permanently and totalled disabled veterans. Senator Taft (R., Ohio) offered the recommittal motion, arguing that the bill was unjust in making provision for a specified group of veterans.

Republican leaders deferred action until this week on a bill to increase the income ceilings for veterans receiving subsistence allowances for on-the-job training.

Taft told his colleagues it is "subject to tremendous abuse" and "ought to be thoroughly studied." He said that as the program now is set up, "at any time during the next 10 years any one of 15,000,000 veterans may start a business and put himself on the roll to draw cash from Uncle Sam."

Before passage of the terminal leave pay bill, Senator Barkley

Loyalty Check Funds Sought By Resolution

$25,000,000 Asked In House Measure To Insure Program

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

A surety clause to permit financing of President Truman's executive order to purge disloyal employes from Government positions was introduced yesterday into the House of Representatives.

The measure, a resolution to authorize 25 million dollars for administration of the President's loyalty program, was immediately referred to the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

Representative John E. Lyle (D., Tex.) author of the resolution, said it was introduced "in the belief" the House-passed Rees bill to investigate Communistic activities of Government workers "will not be enacted at this session of Congress."

Aimed at Program's Foes

"We don't want to lose six months of valuable time in these vital investigations," Lyle said, in explanation.

Lyle said he asked the authorization so that enemies of all programs examine loyalty of Federal jobholders could not hold up by "point of order claims" any possible appropriation for the purpose.

"This authorization," he said, "would clear the procedure way for the investigation and appropriation at any future date, and particularly without the need of enactment of the Rees bill."

Bank Loss Fund Studied

In other Capitol Hill doings yesterday, a Senate Appropriations Committee studied a supplemental appropriation measure passed by the House Friday, which would pay $83,879 to members who suffered loss in the $121,000 shortage in the House Bank.

The same committee took under consideration another supplemental appropriation request for $84,000 to remodel the Senate Restaurant for its new concessionaire, Canteen Food Service, Inc.

The bank loss fund, it was explained, represents the unrecovered portion of the shortage which developed during the tenure of the Former Sergeant at Arms Kenneth Romney. The rest of the shortage has been made up by two bonding companies which had covered Romney and other House bank employes.

The second bonding company refused to make payment of the $83,879 and the matter has been referred to the Justice Department, it was said. In the meantime, the proposed supplemental

3 Oppose D. C. Taking Over 2 Hospitals

St. Elizabeth, Freedmen Change Would Be a Mistake, Congress Told

Three Washington health and hospital officials told Congress yesterday it would be a mistake for the District Government to take over Federal-controlled St. Elizabeths or Freedmen's Hospitals.

Pointing to the inadequacy of Federal allocations for institutions now operated by the District, Health Officer George C. Ruhland said:

"I cannot by any stretch of the imagination look forward to any increase in responsibilities by the District in this field."

Transfer of control, Dr. Ruhland added, is "something definitely to be left alone."

The statements were made at an all day hearing before the House District subcommittee on Reorganization and Home Rule.

Dr. Overholser Opposed

Dr. Winfred Overholser, superintendent of St. Elizabeths, agreed it would "highly impractical from an economic point of view for the District to take over."

"I shudder to think what would happen to appropriations" for the hospital under a new Government setup, he added.

A hands off approach, in the event home rule is granted, was recommended by Charles E. Burbridge, supeintendent of Freedmen's Hospital. He saw "no immediate advantage of municipal control" and a "number of disadvantages."

Virtually the same tale was told by Donald Clemmer, director of the Department of Corrections, who told the subcommittee:

"Should home rule come, I see

1600 Are Rescued In Ship Crackup Off China Coast

Shanghai, July 20 (delayed) (UP).—The United States Navy reported early today that American, British, Chinese and Russian vessels had saved 1600 passengers trapped aboard the steamer Hongkheng, grounded 75 miles north of Hong Kong.

The Navy said the American destroyers Myles C. Fox and Hawkins, carrying 1173 of the stranded passengers, returned to Hong Kong at midnight and reported all persons aboard the ship were removed to safety.

The 6000-ton vessel ran aground on the west side of Reef Island, off Chilang Point, early yesterday. Before the rescue could be effected in high seas and 30-knot winds, the Hongkheng broke in two.

Tydings Tiffs With Jenner On Md. Vote

Senator Prejudges Contested Election, Democrat Charges In Heated Exchange

By The Associated Press

Senator Tydings (D., Md.) declared yesterday that Chairman Jenner (R., Ind.) of a subcommittee investigating a Maryland Senate election contest has prejudged it in favor of the defeated Republican candidate.

"You put on a veneer of impartiality . . . but all you utter reeks—literally reeks—of partisanship," Tydings shouted at Jenner in a heated exchange on the Senate floor.

Jenner replied just as hotly that "I have plenty of evidence of fraud" in the 1946 senatorial election won by Senator Herbert R. O'Conor (D., Md.). The election is being contested by D. John Markey, the unsuccessful Republican candidate.

Tydings replied that the subcommittee handling the contest does not have "a single supporting affidavit."

Quotes Republican Chairman

"You don't wait," he shouted. "All you do is gather evidence that supports your case. You prejudge it without waiting to hear the full story. You have decided it all."

He read into the record a newspaper story quoting B. Caldwell Reece, a retired brigadier general, and that he would be "a fine asset to the Senate."

Tydings said that while the Democrats involved have remained silent, Reece said only five days ago that "up to the present, it looks as if Mr. Markey has an excellent chance of winning the recount. I really think he will win."

Jenner replied that O'Conor has tried to influence the handling of the recount, now embracing the entire State.

Differ About Delay

"I have affidavits that Senator O'Conor himself has gone to the people counting the ballots and said to them, 'I want you to challenge more ballots,'" Jenner said.

Tydings replied "of course Colonel Markey has been as detached from this as summer is from winter."

Jenner said that attorneys for both parties to the contest have delayed the recount by taking too much time to decide whether contested ballots shall be thrown out.

Tydings said "the delays are directly chargeable to the Republican contestant" but Jenner said "the Democrats have been just as derelict."

At one point Jenner said Tydings was "excited."

"I'm not excited," Tydings replied, "but I seem to have got under your skin."

Favors Bipartisan Committee

"No, I'm not," Jenner shouted back, "as if somebody got under your skin."

Tydings then said that he favors a bipartisan, equal presentation investigating committee instead of the two Republican, one Democrat setup headed by Jenner.

"I'm just a freshman Senator," cut in Jenner, "and I've not been here a long time. When in the history of the United States Senate have they (election investigations) ever been conducted on a bipartisan basis?"

"Well," said Tydings, "they're not making any change in the rule right now."

"And they shouldn't be," Jenner replied.

Senator Brewster (R., Me.) then cut into the argument saying:

"I see O'Conor has found a ...

Lovett Urges Full Speed in Greek Aid

He Warns Guerilla Army Tries to Set Up 'Stooge' Rule in Country by Force

By John M. Hightower
Associated Press Staff Writer

The State Department yesterday urged the Senate to speedily approve aid funds for Greece and Turkey, reporting that a guerilla army is trying to "set up a stooge government by force" in Greece.

Robert A. Lovett, Undersecretary of State told a Senate Appropriations subcommittee that the situation had become more urgent since President Truman first proposed in Marsh to help Greece and Turkey.

In addition to asking the committee to provide the 400 million dollars needed to carry out the Greek-Turkish aid programs on which this country has already embarked, Lovett also urged action on a 332-million-dollar foreign relief fund. Both items already have been approved by the House.

In his unusual Saturday afternoon appearance before the committee, Lovett reflected growing concern in high official quarters here over the situation in Greece, which under Communist pressure appears to be building up more and more as a crucial test of both the Truman doctrine and the peace-keeping powers of the United Nations.

Since the Truman doctrine was declared March 12, Congress approved the program and the State Department started it on funds borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, pending an appropriation from Congress.

"I think it is clear," Lovett

Greece Seeks Larger Army to Defend Borders

Athens, July 19 (AP).—The Greek military council, anxious to secure the kingdom's borders against leftist irregulars, has decided to ask that the size of the army be increased from its present 130,000 to 180,000 or 200,000, informants said today.

The sources said additional military classes probably would be called to duty.

Greek army spokesmen reported that strafing planes and battle-toughened infantry veterans were continuing to harry retreating guerillas, and indicated that troops were deploying for a large-scale mop-up battle northeast of Ioannina.

The Communist-directed EAM (National Liberation Front) press bulletin denied that the "democratic army"—as it called the irregulars—was retreating.

The bulletin said the leftists were pushing forward in two directions, to the rear of government forces on Mount Grammos and south toward Khasia, where the national forces routed the guerillas during the first phase of the offensive.

A United Nations investigating group notified the Albanian government that it intended to investigate the fighting around Konitsa and said it would visit both sides of the border. The group asked the Albanian government to furnish all cooperation.

The ministry of public order, disclosing the extent of the crackdown against opposition elements, reported that 11,500 persons from all over Greece were now under arrest on political charges.

The ministry said some 7000 of the total had been arrested in connection with a purported Communist plot.

House Votes to Unify Services, Gives Navy Definite Guarantees

'Anti-Gestapo' Plan for Civilian Intelligence Head Also Is Adopted

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

The House last night passed without a record vote an amended version of the bill to unify the armed forces already passed by the Senate.

Differences between House and Senate versions of the measure will probably require a conference to iron them out before it can finally be passed and sent to the White House.

Shortly before the vote on the bill last night, the House adopted two new amendments, both designed to overcome objections which frequently were voiced during hearings on the original bill.

One of these would guarantee in ironclad language that the Navy would retain its air arm, both in carrier-based and land-based form, as well as responsibility for antisubmarine warfare, a proposal of Representative Clarence J. Brown (R., Ohio), submarine warfare.

The other, introduced by Representative ... Ohio) would require the $14,000-a-year head of the Central Intelligence Agency to be a civilian, preventing a military man from taking the job unless he resigns from the service.

Fears Some Sort of Gestapo

"The American people," Brown said in speaking for his amendment, "are afraid of just one thing. They are afraid that there might be some sort of military dictatorship in this country—some sort of American Gestapo."

Debate which preceded the vote on the measure produced the strange spectacle of its sponsor waging an almost single-handed fight against its passage.

The bill was condemned by its sponsor, Representative Hoffman (R., Mich.) as a move toward military dictatorship and regimentation.

As chairman of the Committee on Executive Expenditures, Hoffman had set something of a precedent by reporting favorably a bill which he had said should be rejected. Yesterday he said he would support a motion to block its passage by recommitting it to his committee, but added that he would vote for it in the end because "some legislation on this subject is to be adopted by the House and this bill is the least harmful."

"Were it in my power," Hoffman added, "I would refuse to legislate on this subject at this time, and

U. S. Assumes Trusteeship Of Conquered Japanese Isles

By D. Harold Oliver
Associated Press Staff Writer

The United States made history yesterday by taking over administration, under a United Nations trusteeship, of the Central Pacific islands captured from Japan.

President Truman signed legislation putting into immediate effect the trusteeship agreement covering the Marianas, Marshalls and Carolines. He named Admiral Louis E. Denfeld U. S. high commissioner of the trust territory.

Denfeld, commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet, will serve as administrator under an executive order terminating military government in the islands and setting up interim civil administration under the Navy pending enactment of a permanent organic law.

The President in a statement said suggestions for such a law will be presented to Congress next year. He asked the State Department to draw up a permanent plan transferring administration to a civilian agency of the Government "at the earliest practicable date."

The United States officially took over the island administration yesterday, but announcement of the enabling act and his Executive order was not made until today.

Thus, for the first time in its history this country becomes a trusteeship power. Following World War I, the League of Nations set up mandates for con-

'Strong Man' And 5 Aides Slain in Burma

Cabinet Members Shot Down by 5 'Terrorists' In Council Chamber

London, July 19 (AP).—The British government announced that five "terrorists" almost wiped out the nine-man government of Burma today with a spray of machine-gun fire which swept the council chamber in Rangoon.

Maj. Gen. U Aung San, 32-year-old "strong man" who was in line to become the first prime minister of the aborning independent nation, and five of his colleagues in the cabinet were killed and two other cabinet members were wounded. A guard also was wounded, and the attackers fled unscathed in a jeep.

Burma apparently was under a censorship blanket, as no news came directly from Rangoon concerning the shooting except by official report.

William J. Casey, Baltimore, Named To Advisory Group

Baltimore, July 19 (AP).—William J. Casey, Baltimore banker and former chairman of the Maryland Efficiency and Economy Commission, has been appointed to the Advisory Commission for Civil Service, Senator O'Conor (D., Md.) said tonight.

O'Conor said he was authorized by Senator Langer (R., Md.), chairman of the Senate Civil Service Committee, to invite Casey to serve on the new commission, which will survey employes in Federal departments and agencies.

The commission will include 15 representatives of the professions, business and labor, named on a geographic basis, O'Conor said.

Training of All Becoming 18 Recommended

House Committee Expected to Approve 1-Year 'Draft' Bill

By William F. Arbogast
Associated Press Reporter

Compulsory military training of all American males upon reaching the age of 18, or after their graduation from high school, was recommended yesterday by a House Armed Services Subcommittee.

The 12-member group sent to the full Armed Services Committee of 33 members for action Tuesday a bill closely following the plan recommended June 1 by President Truman's Advisory Commission on Universal Training.

The President's nine-man commission had advocated the program as indispensable to national security at this time.

Approval Assured

Approval by the full Armed Services Committee at this week's meeting was taken for granted, since even opponents concede that at least 20 members favor it.

However, the bill will not be acted on by Congress at this session unless there is an unexpected change in plans between now and adjournment scheduled for Saturday. Hearings have not been held in the Senate.

Educators, churchmen and labor union groups generally have fought it with the arguments that it is the entering wedge for militarism in this country and is an unnecessary and undemocratic proposal in time of peace.

Principal support has come from the Truman Administration, with the Army and the Navy carrying the fight, and from veterans' groups contending that the United

2 New Yorkers Die In Auto Crash Near Savage, Md.

Two New York City residents were killed early yesterday when their car skidded on the wet pavements of Route 1 near Savage, Md., and crashed into a telegraph pole. Three other passengers escaped serious injury.

The dead were Fred Daniels, 30, driver of the vehicle, and Jeanette Eva Crowley, 35.

Harold de Pass, 40, of New York City, was taken to the University Hospital in Baltimore, where his injuries were listed as "not serious."

Two other passengers in the Washington-bound sedan, Mrs. Shirley Daniels, 30, and Miss Doris Brown, 15, both of New York City, were treated at University Hospital and released. The vehicle was "almost completely wrecked," Waterloo State police said.

Husband's Fate Pends

Jury Convicts Mrs. Ingalls Of Enslaving Her Negro Maid

San Diego, Calif., July 19 (AP).—Mrs. Elizabeth Ingalls, 62, was convicted of slavery in Federal Court today and her sentencing was set for 1 p. m., July 29.

Defense Attorney Clifford Fitzgerald gave notice of appeal.

Her husband, Alfred Wesley Ingalls, whose case was still in the hands of the jury, made an impassioned plea for his wife's release on bail.

Federal Judge Weinberger called a recess before deciding on that plea.

Ingalls declared as the verdict against his wife was announced: "I have loved her for 40 years, lived with her for 30. I want to be with her to take care of her."

He appealed for "mercy, compassion, kindness, consideration."

Prosecuting attorneys asked that Mrs. Ingalls be committed to the San Diego County jail.

The convicted woman, descendant of New England Colonial pioneers, sat slumped in her chair, her hands covering her face, as the verdict was read.

Ingalls, 64, Massachusetts lawyer, and his wife, Elizabeth, are accused specifically of persuading Dora Jones, 58, Negro maid, to accompany them from Berkeley, Calif., to Coronado, Calif., last October 11 "to be held as slave."

The Government maintains that they reduced Dora to a condition where slavery could be accomplished by years of drudgery and threats of jail because of an affair with Mrs. Ingalls' first husband, Walter Harman of Washington, D. C.

Sheen Blast at Psychiatry Prompts Church Expert to Quit

New York, July 19.—Dr. Frank J. Curran, chief psychiatrist at St. Vincent's hospital and one of the nation's outstanding psychiatric practitioners, has resigned from this and other professional posts he held in the Roman Catholic archdiocese of New York because of the failure of the hierarchy to clarify or repudiate the recent attack on the whole field of psychiatry by Monsigner Fulton J. Sheen, professor of philosophy at the Catholic University of America in Washington.

Dr. Curran, a Catholic himself, has served as a psychiatric expert in the matrimonial court of the archdiocese, was a consultant in the chancery office in psychiatric examinations of people wishing to marry who have had psychiatric treatment or hospitalization and was consulted by the church to examine young women wishing to enter a convent. He has withdrawn from all these positions.

Monsignor Walter P. Kellenberg, secretary to Francis Cardinal Spellman, confirmed the report today, but made "no other comment."

The action stemmed from published statements attributed to Msgr. Sheen which he is reported to have made in a sermon at St. Patrick's Cathedral on March 9, to the effect that "the practice of psychiatry is irreligious," and that "Freudian psychoanalysis" is based on "materialism, hedonism, infantilism and eroticism," and that it is "a form of escapism," producing "morbidity and disintegration."

Dr. Curran, explained that Monsignor Sheen's statements, standing uncorrected or unrepudiated, had seriously interfered with his work and the work of other psychiatrists throughout the country. It was asserted in other quarters, also, that the statements had created obstacles for the psychiatricfoundation drive for funds, it being rumored in this connection that a wealthy foundation had changed its mind about a $60,000,000 contribution to the fund which it had contemplated making before Monsigner Sheen's disputed sermon.

In his letter of resignation, Dr. Curran pointed out that "as a result of the newspaper publicity given to Monsignor Sheen's speech, private patients of mine as well as hospital patients of St. Vincent's stated they could no longer come for psychiatric treatment or would not consult a psychiatrist because they believed the Catholic Church was opposed to it."

Other psychiatrists, too, the letter set forth, had indicated that Catholic patients all over the country had become disturbed at their failure to get an official attitude of the Catholic Church toward psychiatry and psychoanalysis.

War Department Explains

Royall and Leftwing In-Law Have 'Family Contacts' Only

By the United Press

The War Department in an unusual formal statement said yesterday that relations between Undersecretary Kenneth C. Royall and his brother-in-law, Johannes Steel, active in leftwing political movements, are limited to "family contacts."

President Truman on Friday nominated Royall as Secretary of War to succeed Robert P. Patterson, who resigned effective Thursday. The nomination was confirmed unanimously by the Senate last night after Senators from both sides of the aisle praised his ability.

In its statement, the War Department called attention to the relationship by marriage between Royall and Steel, who is a naturalized citizen of German birth. But it said Royall has not discussed governmental, political or national policies with Steel.

The War Department action, coming less than 24 hours after Royall's nomination was sent to Capitol Hill, was regarded as a move to head off a blast of unfavorable publicity against Royall based on his relationship to Steel.

The text of the War Department follows:

"In answer to queries from the press, Maj. Gen. Floyd L. Parks, chief of War Department public relations, stated he had discussed with Undersecretary Royall his relationship with Mr. Johannes Steel.

"Mr. Steel married Mr. Royall's half-sister several years ago. Mr. Royall's relations with Mr. Steel have been exclusively family contacts. He has not discussed governmental, political or national policies with him.

Way Cleared In Senate for Mo. Vote Probe

Senator Taft (R., Ohio) yesterday assured "clear right of way on Monday" to Senate consideration of a proposal to investigate the Justice Department's handling of an inquiry into the 1946 Democratic primary in Kansas City.

Senator Kem (R., Mo.), who had demanded action today on this resolution calling for the investigation, reluctantly agreed to the delay after a half hour's exchange. The issue has caused a Senate split on party lines.

Predicting that "there will be an investigation," Kem said he wants early approval. He declared if the Senate does not give it, House members will ask for one.

Taft had asked unanimous consent of the Senate to hold off action on Kem's proposal in order to take up first half a dozen veterans' bills, including one to authorize cashing of terminal leave bonds.

Kem objected at first to Taft's request, declaring he is a veteran himself and has consistently supported veterans' legislation but that the issue of free elections "transcends even that."

The Missourian said the question "should be disposed of in a comparatively short time" and the Senate could then take up the veterans' bills.

Senator Brewster (R., Me.) noted, however, that the Senate can act on the election investigation by itself, while most of the veterans bills stil have to be voted on by the House in the week before tentative adjournment of Congress.

Minority Leader Barkley (D., Ky., noting Kem's assertion that there will be an inquiry by the House if the Senate does not authorize one, said "the House is the place where it ought to start in the very beginning" since the whole matter grew out of a House election.

"Whitewash" Alleged

The primary is the one in which President Truman indorsed Enos Axtell and called for the defeat of former Representative Roger Slaughter. Axtell won the primary but lost out in the general election to Representative Reeves (R., Mo.).

Kem contends that Attorney General Tom Clark "whitewashed" an investigation into alleged irregularities in the primary. Clark early this year closed the inquiry, but recently reopened it.

Kem told Barkley the Senate has a proper interest in the Missouri election because its proposed investigation deals with the Justice Department's inquiry into the effort of the President "to purge a sitting member" of the Congress.

The Missouri Republican said President Truman "called to his assistance, Jim Pendergast, head of the Pendergast mob in Kansas City."

Kem added that he understands many persons are anxious to prevent Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.) from continued participation in the Senate inquiry. He declared that Ferguson as chairman of the Judiciary Subcommittee had demonstrated "unusual sincerity and capacity and should be allowed to complete his inquiry."

Ferguson's subcommittee was assigned to consider the proposed investigation, but the full committee rejected an investigation 7 to 6.

Barkley Questions Motive

Barkley said he understood Kem is attempting to show that Attorney General Clark "in some way sought to cover up or restrain in some way" the probe of the Federal Bureau of Investigation into the election.

Barkley added that FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover had already "refuted this charge."

Barkley said Kem also hoped to go over the head of the Attorney General "in an effort to involve the President of the United States in this."

Kem broke in to ask Barkley if he had read Attorney General Clark's instruction to the FBI and Hoover regarding the Kansas City probe.

Barkley said he had and regarded them as adequate.

Short-Term Aid Projects Get Priority

Paris, July 19 (AP).—The 16-nation Committee for European Economic Cooperation decided today that short-term recovery projects should have priority over long-range programs for general economic development.

The committee, set up under the Marshall proposal, also designated the personnel of four technical committees for food, transport, metal industries and fuel and power and directed them to begin their work on Monday.

French sources said tonight that the committee had adopted a proposed French questionnaire for drawing up a blueprint of all the nations' assets and needs under the Marshall Plan. Copies will be sent to the 16 participating nations immediately, these sources said.

Dog Loves Not Wisely And Goes Into Exile

Westerly, R. I., July 19 (AP).—Denny, a 150-pound Great Dane dog became so devoted to 3-year-old Bonnie Munro that today he was exiled to a farm.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Munro said the mammoth 2-year-old pup became so attached to their baby daughter—"he kept pushing us around whenever we threatened to spank her for being naughty."

Bible School Class Gets Diplomas

YOUNG "GRADUATES"—William Mackensen, director of the Vacation Bible School of All Saints Unitarian Church, 15th and Harvard sts. nw., presents a diploma to Caleb Stabler, 5, of 1734 P st. nw., who headed a long line of "graduates." Children of all faiths attended the school

Quaker-Run Bible School Graduates 100

Children of varied faiths and races were graduated yesterday from the Community Daily Vacation Bible School at All Soul's Unitarian Church, 16th and Harvard sts. nw.

There were Protestants, Catholics, Jews, whites and Negroes, and even one lad of Japanese blood—Dennis Coles—among the 100 graduates.

During the past six weeks, 100 children have participated in activities of the school, operated in Pierce Hall under the leadership of the Friend's Meeting of Washington, in cooperation with other church groups.

Children played in games in the Pierce Hall "gym"; heard biblical and other stories from their teachers, and worked at handicraft projects. One of their favorite story-tellers is Mrs. Grace Yaukey, sister of Pearl Buck, and an author writing under the pen name of Cornelia Spencer.

Reginald Price of the Florida Avenue Friends Meeting, is chairman of the interfaith and interracial committee that conducted the school. Among volunteer instructors have been William Mackensen, Evelyn Fox and Mrs. Betty Linton Snyder, all Quakers, and Miss Jean Jennifer, a teacher from Howard University. Also, several young men from the Washington Student Citizenship Seminar have been leading the "gym" games, among them Carl Smith and Joe Abrams.

According to Mrs. Snyder, this year's curriculum has been built around the theme of "Fellowship in One World," with the students studying about other nationalities, races and religions.

scheduled to be held in the Fresno Memorial Auditorium, which seats 3000. Several days ago, it became apparent that no such crowd was going to turn up, whereupon, George Stiller, press agent and impresario for the show, gave up the auditorium and arranged for the use of the ballroom.

Kenny, a well-to-do lawyer, said he put up "a couple of hundred bucks" to defray the expenses, and he said that Cornelius Vanderbilt, jr., came through with "another hundred bucks." Vanderbilt, however, was not here today.

In response to a question about Communists flocking to the Wallace-for-President movement, Kenny said:

"If Communists come out for Wallace, and undoubtedly they will—well, I had the same problem when I was chairman of a Roosevelt committee. This is open to everybody. Come one, come all—as long as they are registered voters."

Hits Dewey and Truman

In advance of today's open meeting, Kenny chuckled and stated frankly that his keynote speech had been ghost-written by a Hollywood intellectual. The thoughts, however, were his own.

"The action we take to start the ball rolling for Henry Wallace," he said, "can and I hope will, serve as a model for Democrats of other States. We are making a blueprint for Wallace organizations which we hope will be constructed in every possible State in the Union."

Kenny said that a contest between President Truman and Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York would give the voters "no real choice."

"A race between Dewey and Truman," he said, "will be as phoney as one of those wrestling matches in which both contestants grunt and growl for an hour and a half, and then ride home in the same automobile, and divide the prize money."

He gave Mr. Truman no credit for vetoing the Taft-Hartley labor bill. He said the President "failed" to rally enough Democrats to sustain the veto.

He gave Mr. Truman no credit for fighting for OPA, either. Without mentioning the President's efforts, he said that the GOP and "poll-tax Democrats" wrecked the OPA and then blamed high prices on labor.

Nor did he mention Mr. Truman's fight on behalf of FEPC. After saying that FEPC was buried on Capitol Hill, he remarked:

"And where is the voice of Mr. Truman while these shenanigans go on, just a few blocks down the street from his official residence?"

He criticized Mr. Truman, too, for not going to Wallace's rescue when the Iowan was "threatened with an injunction forbidding him the platform of a Government-owned park," in Washington.

Assails Truman Doctrine

But the most bitter part of Kenny's address was that part dealing with communism. He said:

"He (Mr. Truman) has led the pack of witch burners with his shameful executive order authorizing a so-called 'loyalty check' of Government employes—an investigation which will cost the voters 25 million dollars in cash, and infinitely more in the curtailment of American liberties.

"And there's the Truman Doctrine. The Truman Doctrine was hatched by Taft and Vandenberg, with the assistance of Mr. Dewey's intended Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, and Mr. Truman's name on it means far less than a label on a can of peas."

He said that the Truman Doctrine was designed to prop up a rotten military dictatorship in Greece under "a cartoon king."

Cautious on Marshall Plan

Kenny was cautious in talking about the Marshall Plan for restoring Europe's economic health. He merely observed that "we could be more hopeful of its real worth if the Truman Doctrine had been frankly repudiated."

Then he launched into an attack on American efforts to step up production in Germany's Ruhr, and no American policy in China.

"Today," he said, "a Democratic President sees eye to eye with a Republican chairman of a Foreign Relations Committee, on a policy which under the old slogan of fighting communism is supporting reactionary governments everywhere, fighting the democratic upsurge where it can.

"Mr. Truman's War Department sent Chiang Kai-shek 135 million rounds of ammunition, though we still pretend to take no part in China's tragically prolonged civil war. That's what starts third parties."

Disclaims Third Party Aim

Kenny said he did not aim at starting a third party. He talked, later on, of an independent candidacy for Wallace in California in the event Wallace won in the preferential primary, but was not nominated for President at the Democratic national convention.

If Wallace fails to win the primary, Kenny said, he would just forget the whole thing. He insisted, however, that a Wallace slate of delegates was certain to triumph.

In a radio debate last night, Earl (Squire) Behrens, veteran political reporter for the San Francisco Chronicle, told Kenny in effect that he was talking through his hat in predicting a Wallace victory in California. Mr. Truman had the Democratic organization, Behrens said, and couldn't fail in a primary election.

California has 313,000 Federal employes.

test an election (when the Democrats were in power) and I found no such lofty sentiments as the Senator speaks of now. I found a solid alignment against me on the committee and in the verdict."

The exchange started when Tydings said the recount should be conducted entirely in the open, and that the results should be made public at the end of every day.

Jenner said that procedure had been followed for a long time, but that the information given out could not be final because it did not take into account the challenged ballots. The subcommittee then decided to withhold all information on the recount's progress, he said.

Tydings said that the election recount was being conducted in a "closed room from which press and public are excluded."

He suggested that the recount be opened to the press.

As Brewster and Tydings exchanged remarks about action of Democratic and Republican majorities in the past, Tydings shouted that he had voted against "my party 10 times more often than" any present Republican.

Brewster stopped and pointed at Senator Morse (R., Oreg.), who frequently voted against Republicans, and remarked "that's a rather big order."

Everyone laughed, including Morse and Tydings, as the Maryland Democrat pointed out that he had been a Senator much longer than Morse.

nist-inspired plot to overthrow the government. Most of those seized have been deported to Aegean islands.

Dwight P. Griswold, administrator of the U. S. program of assistance to Greece, said at his first news conference that "rebel fighting is holding back the reconstruction of Greece."

"I want to see the rebellion stopped," he asserted.

Griswold said he knew nothing about the arrest of the Communists, and that this was outside of the scope of his duties.

Griswoid said the American mission planned to launch a reconstruction program for railroads, roads, ports and the Corinth Canal.

Bulgaria States Stand

Sofia, July 19 (U.P.).—Bulgaria has informed the United Nations Security Council that it will not be responsible for future events if alleged Greek border provocations are repeated, a communique announced today.

The communique, reiterating a charge made last night by a government spokesman, said Greek troops crossed into Bulgarian territory at dawn Sunday near the junction of the Bulgarian-Turkish-Greece border in pursuit of a small group of "the Greek democratic army."

It said a Bulgarian farmer, Peter Angelov of Svilengrad, one mile inside Bulgaria, was seized as a witness to the Greek guerilla entry into Bulgaria, the communique said.

"To date Angelov has not been returned," the communique said.

It added that two other farmers in the vicinity succeeded in escaping.

Clay Denies Russian Bid for Steel Plants

Berlin, July 19 (U.P.). — Gen. Lucius D. Clay, American commander in Germany, today rejected a Russian request for seven huge German steel plants in the British-controlled Ruhr as reparations.

Clay said he would not consider any request for the plants until a new agreement on the level of German industry had been put into effect.

Dewey Makes Side Trip for State Pledges

Bozeman, Mont., July 19 (U.P.).—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey dropped the "nonpolitical" label from his Western tour today when he drove 140 miles off his vacation route to receive assurances of Idaho, Montana and Washington support for the GOP presidential nomination.

Mrs. Dewey and their two sons remained in Yellowstone National Park while the New York chief executive motored over rough mountain roads to confer here with GOP leaders of the three States.

The New York Governor was met en route by National Committeeman Don Wetstone of Montana at Tarist's Ranch, where a large red, white and blue "Welcome, Dewey!" banner bedecked a building.

Idaho, Montana and Washington leaders all said there was strong sentiment for the New Yorker in their States, but made no commitments as to delegates.

Washington was represented by Harlan Peyton, national committeeman, and Tyre Hollander, Seattle leader. They carried with them the suggestion that Dewey team up with one of their favorite sons, Senator Harry Cain of Tacoma or Eric Johnston, movie executive.

Ezra Whitla, vice chairman of the Republican National Committee, said "Dewey had Idaho before. He is just as strong today because of the fine showing in 1944."

The Western leaders said they thought Gov. Earl Warren of California was "sold on his present job," and that he had no intention of running for a national office. The three States, having a candidate convention vote of 41, were for Dewey in 1944.

The leaders admitted that some of the followers of Senator Robert Taft of Ohio, Dewey's chief rival, were making a strong fight for Western delegates' votes. It was understood the Ohio Senator would make a personal appearance in Seattle this fall.

Christenberry Accused of 'Dereliction'

By The Associated Press

Harry W. Belfor of New Orleans, opposing confirmation of Herbert W. Christenberry to be Federal district judge in eastern Louisiana, said yesterday that Christenberry had been "derelict" in cases arising from a bank failure in 1933.

Belfor, who identified himself as an investigator for the Louisiana State Bank Commissioner, testified before a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee considering the nomination.

Senator Ellender (D., La.), only other witness at the hearing, described Christenberry as an "able prosecutor." He said he and Senator Overton (D., La.) had recommended the appointment.

Former Long Associate

Christenberry, former political associate of the late Huey Long, now is U. S. District Attorney for the district.

Telegrams from a score of New Orleans residents, mostly attorneys, indorsing the appointment, were read into the record.

Belfor reviewed the failure of the old Hibernia Bank & Trust Co. and resulting suits against directors and officials in liquidation proceedings.

Belfor testified that "millions" could have been recovered in three suits filed but that they had been settled for $861,000.

Approved by RFC

In response to questions by Chairman Cooper (R., Ky.), Belfor said that the settlement had been approved by attorneys for the State and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which was a depositor of the bank.

Cooper then asked:

"If Mr. Christenberry were derelict in his duty, then could you not ascribe to the other attorneys the same dereliction?"

"Yes," Belfor answered.

"And the RFC and the State?"

"Yes."

Cooper said he would discuss the matter with the other subcommittee members before deciding whether to go into the matter further.

New Publicity Chief of CIO Says He's Right-Winger

By the United Press

Allan L. Swim, the CIO's new publicity director, served notice on that union's left-wing elements last night that he is a "right-winger."

In his first editorial as editor of the CIO's Official CIO News, Swim said that, politically, he is a Democrat—"ideologically, right-winger."

"I'll do my best to follow CIO policy—right down the middle without veering to the right or left," he said. "The public won't have to read between the lines to know what I'm talking about."

Swim, a former Scripps-Howard newspaper reporter, succeeded Len DeCaux as a CIO publicity director last week. DeCaux was aften described as a left-wing sympathizer.

Bell Sues to Prohibit Ad Devices on Phones

Oklahoma City, July 19 (AP).—The Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. filed suit in United States District Court today to prevent use of advertising devices on its telephones and company attorneys said it might be the forerunner of similar suits throughout the country.

Defendants named were the Dialite Dial Co. and the Novelad Co., both of Oklahoma City. The suit asked a declaratory judgment to prevent them from placing advertising discs on telephone dials.

Guatemala Asks Parley Exclude Honduras

Guatemala City, July 19 (U.P.).—Guatemala today lodged a protest with the British government against inclusion of British Honduras in the conference of British Caribbean Colonies convoked for September in Kingston, Jamaica.

Guatemala is seeking to recover sovereignty over British Honduras which it ceded to Britain in 1858. It has formally denounced the treaty on the grounds that Britain failed to live up to the compensatory clause calling for construction of a highway to unite the port of Belize, in British Honduras, with the Guatemalan hinterland.

Police Find $11,000 In Rubble-Filled Home

Davenport, Iowa, July 19 (AP).—Nearly $11,000 was found today in the rubbish-clogged home of William H. Davis, 68-year-old odd jobs man, by police who went there to clean up the place on order of the city council.

Davis did not tell police about the money, $10,872 of which was in Government securities and $94.40 of which was in cash, and he offered no explanation when it was found.

Accord Assures Living Wage for French Workers

Paris, July 19 (AP).—French management and labor today achieved a four-point agreement promising a living wage to French workers, more goods for French households, and industrial peace to the French public.

The accord, drafted by the Conseil National du Patronat Francais (CNPF) and the nation's second largest labor union, the Confederation Francaise des Travailleurs Chretiens (CFTC), pledged:

1. To give all workers renumeration which will permit them to live normally.

2. To increase "substantially" all family allotments, granted according to the size of the family, and to institute a rental allotment.

3. To increase the production of goods for current consumption even, if necessary, at the cost of a slowing up in the production of capital equipment.

4. To establish permanent contact for bargaining on working conditions between management and labor organizations.

D. G. Roe, Former Md. Congressman Divorced in Reno

Reno, Nev., July 19 (AP).—Dudley G. Roe, sr., former Maryland Congressman and State Legislator, yesterday was divorced from the former Anna Jane Metcalfe to whom he had been married 41 years.

The divorce was granted after a closed hearing before District Judge A. J. Maestretti. Property rights were settled in a sealed agreement.

The Roes were married at Haymarket, Va., April 17, 1906. They lived in Sudlersville, Md., where Roe as born and here he operated a grain business.

The couple has three sons and one daughter.

Roe represented the First Maryland District in Congress from 1944 until this year. He also had served in both the Maryland House of Delegates and the Senate.

Hour for War Left To Dutch Official

After Tuesday, Word Given Van Mook on Indonesia Action

Amsterdam, July 19 (U.P.).—Reliable sources said today that the Netherlands government had authorized Dr. Hubertus J. Van Mook, acting governor-general of the East Indies, to "fix the moment" for war against the Indonesian republic any time after Tuesday.

The government summoned the lower chamber of the Dutch Parliament about Indonesia. Parliament is on summer vacation.

The only official word on the delicate situation wa sa Dutch government spokesman's statement that Holland, financially and otherwise, could not afford long to delay a decision on the Indonesian question. He said the Linggardjati agreement of last March 27, which laid the foundation for a United States of Indonesia within the Dutch Empire, still would rule the government's actions.

But, he added, recognition of the sovereignty of Indonesia was impossible at this point.

The sources that reported Van Mook had been instructed he could order the 98,000-man Dutch army, navy and air force of the East Indies into action after Tuesday said this indicated that the Netherlands government had not entirely given up hope that a full-dress war could be avoided.

By threatening war, the Netherlands government hoped to force the Indonesian republic into making a move toward peace, they said. In this connection, it was said that the only acceptable thing now was for the Indonesians to accept unconditionally a Dutch order to issue a cease-fire order.

This order also included provisions that the Indonesians were to stop all hostile propaganda against Holland and to move their army, estimated at about 200,000 men, but poorly armed compared with the Dutch, back 6 miles from the frontier that separates territory under Indonesian control and that under control of the Dutch armed forces.

In answer to this order, the Indonesians had said that all actions under it would be mutual—both sides should issue a cease-fire order and both sides should stop putting out hostile propaganda and pull back 6 miles from the frontier.

China Gives Sun Li-jen Training Job

Nanking, July 19 (AP).—Lieut. Gen. Sun Li-jen was appointed vice commander of all Chinese government ground forces today and placed in charge of a new training program as first fruits of the recent total mobilization order against the Communists.

The semiofficial Central Daily News announced appointment of the American-trained Sun and said he also would retain his post as vice commandant of government forces in Manchuria.

Highly informed military sources said his job would be to take green recruits and turn out modern combat divisions and that the training center probably would be located on the big island of Formosa to avoid possible interruption by the Communists.

Sun, a graduate of Virginia Military Institute, formerly commanded the American-equipped new First Army, which fought brilliantly against the Japanese in Burma and against the Communists in Manchuria.

On the actual battle fronts, the official Chinese Central News Agency said government forces had routed five Communist divisions in western Shantung Province and had recaptured Yangshantsi, a village 78 miles northwest of the big government base of Suchow.

The same agency repeated reports of the last few days that large Communist forces were massing again southeast of Szepingkai in Manchuria.

Sen. Bridges Asks Voiding Of Contract With Russians

By International News Service

Chairman Bridges (R., N.H.) of the Senate Appropriations Committee, charged the State Department yesterday with inconsistency in seeking funds to fulfill existing lend-lease commitments to Russia.

Bridges angrily refused to hear a State Department official's plea for money to carry out the "sale" of lend-lease pipeline goods to the Soviet Union. The Senator told Deputy Assistant Secretary of State C. Tyler Wood:

"As far as I'm concerned . . . you are wasting your time. We can't carry water on two shoulders. Either we are in this thing to stop communism or we are not.

"I can't see how the State Department has the nerve to seek funds to send material to Russia while at the same time, on the same day, it asks for money to aid Greece and Turkey."

The item which Wood sought was $700,000 for administrative expenses in making deliveries of lend-lease goods, mostly oil refinery equipment, in transit at the end of the war.

Before Bridges' committee was legislation calling for more than $1,300,000,000 for foreign aid, including the 400 millions necessary to carry out President Truman's Greek - Turkish anti - Communist program. The House Friday passed the bill.

Wood explained that the lend-lease was contracted for before December 31, 1946, and explained that the House had cut the administrative sum to $500,000. Wood said:

"As an American citizen I hate to see this country convicted before the world of failure to carry out its contracts."

Bridges shot back that Wood was "certainly very gullible." Later he struck these words from the record.

Bridges said that the United States has made "contract after contract with Russia and her satellites and had every one of them broken."

Wood said:

"I don't want to see my Government, of which I am proud, welsh on a contract."

House Unit Approves Using Alien Seamen

The House Merchant Marine Committee yesterday approved a bill to permit use of alien seamen on American merchant ships. Such war-time authority expired May 31. The legislation would apply only to those who served on American ships during the war.

Questioned in Plank Death Inquiry

RELATIVES QUESTIONED—Mrs. Nellie Burrer, left confers with her attorney, Robert Burton, center, before the inquiry into the death of Norman LeRoy Plank at Fairfax County Courthouse yesterday. At right is Mrs. Burrer's son, Donald, who found Plank's body. The Burrers were away over the weekend when Plank was shot

Tell Tale Light Switch Points To Murder in Death of Plank

Additional evidence pointing to murder in the death of Norman Le Roy Plank was unearthed at an inquiry yesterday just as officials again were leaning toward a suicide theory.

The newest puzzling development emerged when Fairfax Commonwealth Attorney Hugh March again questioned all those who have figured in the case.

It was definitely established at the inquiry that the lights were out when Plank's body was found. The switch controlling the lights was at the top of the steps leading to the recreation room. Plank's body was found on the first step.

Donald Burrer, nephew of the slain man, and C. O. Christenson, a neighbor, told Marsh there was no light in the basement when they found the body.

If, as police believe, Plank was shot in the recreation room at about 11 p. m. Sunday, the murderer had to step over his body to climb the steps and turn out the lights.

The other line of reasoning, highly improbable, was that Plank committed suicide in the dark the night of July 6 at the Chesterbrook Woods, Va., home. Police found no fingerprints on the handle of the gun nor any powder burns on his right forehead where he was shot.

Alvah B. Martin, 29, only suspect in the case thus far, was again questioned at the inquiry yesterday.

Others questioned, in addition to Martin, Burrer and Christenson, were Mrs. Nellie Burrer, Plank's sister with whom he lived; Louis Wargo, 4009 21st st. ne., who attended a party with Plank the Friday night before he was found dead, and Sergt. Cecil E. Brown, Fairfax County policeman, who was the first officer to arrive at the scene.

Mrs. Burrer and her son were away from the house for the weekend when Plank was shot to death.

Sitting in on the inquiry with Marsh were Fairfax Chief of Police Carl McIntosh, Chief of Detectives Henry Magarity, and detectives working on the case.

Chief McIntosh said that after he has made a study of the record of the entire proceedings he might be able to make a decision on whether to charge Martin with murder.

"There are a few things in this case," he said, "that make you think Martin had more to do with it than he would have you think."

Meanwhile, Marsh said that he had already prepared an indictment charging Martin with the theft of Mrs. Burrer's car. It will be presented to the Grand Jury Monday.

Martin was arrested five days after Plank's death by Kingston, N. Y., police while he was driving the car. He admits being with Plank, Friday and stealing the car police said, but denies being with him Saturday evening or Sunday.

no need to disrupt the present fine working system."

He recommended, however, that a change in the local form of government might bring with it possible removal of the authority of the Attorney General to "designate placement for offenders" against the District of Columbia code.

The unanimity of approach by "institutional" officials was missing at a hearing earlier on a proposed merit system for the District.

"The establishment of a municipal or Federal merit system for professional public school employes would in effect destroy the authority of the Board of Education to administer the public schools," Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of schools, warned.

A successful merit system, he told the subcommittee, "must be operated by the agency or government responsible for the educational program."

Asked if a merit system for the District should be "tied" to the Federal system, he replied:

"In general I think it's good government to keep controls as near home as possible."

Fowler Testifies

District Budget Officer Walter L. Fowler testified, however, that District employes would rather remain "under provisions of the Federal Civil Service than . . . a purely local merit system.' He urged "one over-all merit system . . . to achieve uniformity of treatment, efficiency and facility of administration."

Harry B. Mitchell, president of the U. S. Civil Service Commission, labeled the "present cooperation between the District government and the U. S. Civil Service Commission" as "inadequate and urged establishment of a "local merit system."

Heads of the local Fire and Police Departments, in testimony before the subcommittee, expressed opposition to uniform merit systems for all District employes in the event home rule is granted.

Fire Chief Clement Murphy contended selection and promotion of firemen, as well as classification and retirement "should remain separate and distinct from broad general rules governing other District public employes."

Favors Separate Commission

Milton D. Smith, assistant superintendent of Metropolitan Police, said he favored a separate Civil Service Commission for Washington under home rule.

The hearings, called to gather information for use in drawing up a proposed charter for the District, will be resumed at 9 a. m. tomorrow.

Witnesses will include officers of the Federation of Citizens' Associations and the Federation of Civic Associations.

Korean Leftist Leader Slain; Gunman Flees

Seoul, Korea, July 19 (AP).—Lyuh Woon-hyung, Korean leftist but anti-Communist political leader, was assassinated today by a Korean gunman who escaped.

Korean police said the assassin, who appeared to be about 26 years old, fired three shots from a .45-caliber pistol at the moving automobile of the 61-year-old Lyuh. Two struck the victim, who died two hours later.

Police said the Lyuh's bodyguard returned the fire and that a police lieutenant grappled with the bodyguard in the mistaken belief he was the attacker. Meanwhile the gunman fled.

Lyuh, possibly the most prominent non-Communist leftist in Korea, had been repeatedly invited by American authorities to join in attempts to form a coalition government.

Lyuh had pursued a hectic career in which he was frequently beaten by unknown attackers.

Lieut. Gen. John R. Hodge, American commandant of southern Korea, told a press conference that only a few days ago Lyuh had informed him of receiving anonymous threats by mail after trying to purge his following of Communists.

Lyuh once was Vice Minister of Foreign Affairs in the unrecognized Korean provisional government which was formed in China during the war.

In September, 1945, at the invitation of apprehensive Japanese residents of Korea, he founded a so-called "People's Republic" which proclaimed itself the government of the country. American troops arrived in Korea two days later and dissolved his organization.

Ruler of Indian State Deposed as Insane

New Delhi, July 19 (AP).—The government of India announced tonight that His Highness Mir Faiz Muhammad Khan Talpur, 34, ruler of the northwestern Indian state of Khairpur, had been deposed on the grounds he was insane.

The announcement said the Mir's 14-year-old son, George Ali Murad Khan Talpur, was chosen to succeed to the throne of the little state, which lies between Sind Province and Rajputana.

Britain Yields On Italy Pact

Rome, July 19 (AP).—Diplomatic sources said today Britain, at the urging of Washington, had abandoned her insistance upon Italy's immediate ratification of the Italian peace treaty.

The informants said that just before the opening of the Paris economic conference on July 12, British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin had urged immedate ratification upon Italian Foreign Minister Carlo Sforza. However, the informants added, Washington informed London of its belief that such an approach would put the Allies in a bad light in Italy.

Diplomatic observers said that Washington feared possible effects inside Italy, where the Communist Party is the second strongest and is searching for an issue to force its way back into the government, from which it was excluded seven weeks ago by the Christian Democratic Premier, Alcide de Gasperi.

Six Burmese Leaders Slain

layed through the British governor, Sir Hugert Rance.

Fought Communists

But the official British statement said: "There is nothing in the reports so far received to suggest that the situation is not fully under control."

Aung San was leader of Burma's strongest political party, the anti-Fascist Peoples' Freedom League which has come into frequent collision with Burmese Communist Party members and other Burmese who contended it was "working with the British" to make Burma a dominion within the empire.

The official account said:

"When the executive council was in session, a jeep drew up to the main entrance. One man stayed in the jeep and five men armed with Sten guns and two rifles went upstairs to the council chambers.

"An armed guard outside the door tried to stop them and was shot. He was badly wounded and could not give any details. The three men armed with Sten guns entered the council chamber and sprayed the occupants with bullets. They then made good their escape in the jeep.

"The following casualties are now confirmed.

"Dead—U Aung San, deputy chairman of the council; U Ba Win, member for commerce and supplies; Abdul Bazak, member for education and planning; Mahn Ba Khaing, member for industry and labor; Thakin Mya, member for finance; Ohn Maung, deputy secretary, transport and communications department.

"Wounded—U Ba Choe, member for information; the Sawbwa of Mong Pawn, counselor for the frontier areas."

New Council Formed

In a broadcast, Sir Hugert deplored the assassinations as a "dastardly act" and announced the formation of a new executive council.

"I am glad to inform you," he told the Burmese people, "that the president, Thankin Nu, has agreed to form a new council and that he will have in this task the assistance of Pyaw Bwe Umya, U Aung San Wai and U Ba Cyan."

He said he deplored the loss of "a statesman and a leader and of ministers who can ill be spared. I call upon the people of Burma to remain calm and to continue to follow the wise course toward independence set by their leader."

Aung San was commander of the Burma Independence Army during which he fought underground against the Japanese occupation.

He was defense minister in the Ba Maw government set up under Japanese sponsorship. He later took to the hills and organized the resistance movement which took the name of the Anti-Fascist Peoples Freedom League and began a campaign for Burmese independence.

He was leader of the delegation which went to London last December and reached agreement with Prime Minister Attlee that Burmese self-government, either within or without the British Empire, would be expedited. The agreement provided for a constituent assembly, an interim government and other steps toward independence expected to be achieved by October of this year.

Aung San said in Rangoon on June 17 that Burma's constitution would provide for an independent, sovereign republic.

Aung San caused the expulsion of the Communist Party from the Freedom League last year, charging the Communists were "betraying confidential information, attempting by underhand tactics to overthrow the Freedom League and inciting the peasants and workers to demonstrate at a time when demonstrations were not to the national advantage."

Last January large-scale demonstrations were directed against Aung San in Rangoon.

U Baw Win, one of the assassinated cabinet members, was an elder brother of Aung San.

No Danger Of War Now, Bevins Says

London, July 19.—Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin told the miners today that there is no danger of war in this generation and that his present efforts were being directed toward preserving the peace 40 or 50 years from now.

As part of his program for world peace, Bevin called upon the miners and other workers to produce more to "keep us out of the money lenders' hands." He was referring to the United States and dollar borrowing.

At Morpeth, in Northumberland, he told the miners that "with common sense between nations" today's international crisis "can be very readily overcome."

Has Eye on Future

"Not a day passes, not a moment passes, in the job on which I am now engaged," he said, "without which I am very conscious that a wrong decision or a wrong judgment or a petulant offer, or something of that kind, might condemn not this generation—for I don't think there is a danger of war in this generation—but the next generation to a war. One must keep one's mind on 30, 40, or 50 years' time."

The Foreign Secretary took the opportunity to assuage the fears of the French that Britain sought to endanger the security of France by vitalizing the Ruhr and rebuilding a strong Germany and also denied that the principal purpose of the Marshall Plan was "really to re-create Germany."

Then with an eye to his audience—the miners want in general closer cooperation between Britain and Russia and less dependence of London on Washington—Bevin said he was working to "find a way to unite the United States and Russia in a common endeavor for the uplift of humanity as a whole."

England Not Tied to U. S.

He assured the miners that England was not "tied to the United States." He went on: "I don't like being tied to money lenders at all. Let me say on behalf of the United States that I have not found them anxious to lend money, either, which seems perfectly natural. I want to get out of dollar borrowing. I want to see it put an end to, because it is unnatural for the United States and unnatural for us.

"Let me say this, however: Marshall has said that we must show not how much we want but how little we require. In other words, 'let us see how much you can do for yourselves before you ask me to help.'

"That is a very sound basis to work on and I'm going to try it."

U. N. Economic Council Told To Prove Itself or Retire

Lake Success, N. Y., July 19 (U.P.).—The United Nations Economic and Social Council opened the most important session of its brief career today with a warning from eastern Europe that it must prove itself or retire to the sidelines in world affairs.

The main issue as the council plunged into a five-week meeting was whether it could survive the East-West split over the economic reconstruction of Europe and play its part as one of the three main gears in the UN's peace-making machinery.

Jan Papanek of Czechoslovakia, one of the participants in Russia's boycott of the Marshall Plan for European reconstruction, told delegates of 18 nations that if they do not assert the council's powers in world affairs it will "deteriorate . . . to an ineffective and secondary instrument."

Says People Doubt

Papanek, acting president of the council, declared that people "have begun to doubt the ability of the United Nations to achieve the aims for which it was organized."

The council, sidetracked so far by the United States and the western European countries in the drafting of the Marshall program, adopted a problem-studded agenda of 36 items—including half a dozen directly related to the European economic scene.

Britain opened what probably will be an Anglo-American fight against even consideration of a proposal by the international cooperative alliance for U. N. control of the strategic oil fields of the Middle East. The proposition is emphatically opposed by American and British oil interests.

The council agreed to decide within three days whether to put the proposal on the agenda or eliminate consideration of it at this session.

Urged to Face Issues

Papanek urged delegates to face the issues squarely and prove they are capable "not only of discussing" subjects, but also of getting something done about the world's economic and social problems.

It was generally expected that the council would be converted quickly into the first battleground for the East-West conflict touched off by Secretary of State George C. Marshall's plan for a unified European recovery program and the Soviet-led boycott of that program by all of eastern Europe.

Europe's Self-Aid Ability Is Doubted

Connally Gravely Questions Possibility Of Nations' Cooperation in Joint Plan

By the United Press

Senator Tom Connally (D., Tex.) last night expressed "grave doubts" that European nations can produce an effective program for their economic recovery.

Speaking on NBC's Foreign Policy Forum, the former chairman and present ranking Democratic member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said at the same time that this country cannot afford to exhaust itself in the relief of Europe.

Senator Carl A. Hatch (D., N. Mex.) said on the same program that "some countries still look on America as the land of such bounty and such plenty that all they have to do is sit down and profit from our generosity."

Hits at World Plans

Connally went on to say this country had no hope of getting Russia to cooperate for econmic recovery with the rest of Europe, but added, "we have no business planning to run the whole world."

In the midst of the broadcast, devoted primarily to foreign aid plans, Connally injected the atomic bomb issue by stating, without elaboration, that:

"If we cannot secure international inspection and safety requirements as to atomic energy, there is nothing left for us to do but keep the secret and make such use of it as our national interests may require. If Russia insists on her obstinacy, there is no other possible course we can pursue."

Connally even expressed doubt that "pending plans"—evidently referring to the Marshall Plan—were the best or most efficient for doing the European recovery job.

Sees 'Pool' Desirable

"It would be desirable for the nations of Europe to join in an international pool to work out their own relief plans as well as receive such aid as we may give to them," he said.

"I have grave doubts as to whether the nations of Europe can be made to cooperate sufficiently to make a joint plan work."

Connally warned that the United States could not "abuse" its own resources and "dislocate" its economy with "extravagant relief plans."

He said that "nations demanding aid from America must not spend their resources maintaining armies."

One-third of the 300 million dollar Greek aid fund is earmarked for military equipment and practically 100 per cent of the 100 million dollars for Turkey is for military use.

Pacific Isles In U. S. Care

56-year-old Westboro (Mass.) officer is a veteran of the Pacific war, having commanded a battleship division in the Okinawa and Japanese home islands campaigns.

He became Pacific Fleet chief last January. Prior to that he headed the Bureau of Naval Personnel and directed demobilization of such personnel after the war.

In his statement the President recalled that he had approved last month recommendations agreed upon by the Secretaries of State, War, Navy and Interior for future administration of Guam, American Samoa, and the trust territory.

"Accordingly," he said, "I have issued an executive order terminating military government in the trust territory and delegating responsibility for civil administration on an interim basis to the Navy Department, pending transfer to a civilian department or agency of the Government at the earliest practicable date."

He said it is this Government's intention to "carry out in full" the obligations toward the island natives and toward the United Nations as called for in the agreement between the United States and the Security Council.

While the Navy is given interim control of the islands, the President's order provides that the authority granted the United States to close any areas for security reasons shall be exercised jointly by the Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of State.

ABOARD PRESIDENT WARFIELD—The Rev. John Stanley Gruel, 30, of Worcester, Mass. (left, above), was found aboard the President Warfield when the ship carrying 4550 Jewish immigrants was brought into Haifa Harbor under British escort. Terrorist Mine Wounds 9 In Jerusalem

Jerusalem, July 19 (AP).—A rivet mine planted by terrorists blasted a British military truck in the Jewish quarter of eastern Jerusalem tonight, wounding five British soldiers and four civilians, including a young Jewish boy.

A few hours earlier, a terrorist attack in Haifa had killed one policeman and wounded a second policeman and a Jewish civilian.

The civilian casualties from the mine explosion included a Jewish couple walking nearby when the explosive was detonated by a plunger 50 yards away and two Jews hurt when the roof of their house collapsed from concussion.

The rivet mine was an ingenious home-made weapon of gelignite. The wire attached to it led to the plunger in the rear of a row of houses facing the Jerusalem zoo.

Earlier tonight two bombs, one a dud, were thrown at a military armored car, but there were no casualties.

Shortly after the mine explosion, at least three other blasts were heard, followed by recurrent gunfire, but no explanation could be obtained for authorities.

All traffic in the city halted and security zones and gates of the old walled city were closed.

The violence in Jerusalem and Haifa came after announcement by Palestine Jews that they would stage a two-hour general strike tomorrow afternoon, starting at 4 p. m., in protest against the deportation of 4550 uncertified immigrants who arrived in the ship European Exodus of 1947 yesterday. A Jewish Agency statement called British interception of the immigrant vessel a "piratical attack."

In Haifa, eight shots fired from an ambush felled the two policemen and the Jewish civilian.

Police called tonight's outbreaks and the mining of roads around Jerusalem and on the coastal plain "efforts to impress the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine just before the delegates leave and to impress the Palestine Government with the resistance power against the British if we execute the three boys in Acre Prison."

The prisoners at Acre are admitted members of Irgun Zvai Leumi, Jewish underground fighters, who were condemned to death for participating in a prison break last May 4. Two British sergeants kidnaped a week ago still are being held as hostages for the condemned prisoners by Irgun Zvai Leumi.

The strike announced for tomorrow will coincide with the funerals of the three who were killed on the Exodus, a 1814-ton vessel formerly named the President Warfield and engaged in Atlantic coastal traffic.

Speed in Greek Aid Is Urged

said, "that the urgency of this program, as stated by the President in his message, has been greatly increased by subsequent events in Greece and in the rest of the world.

"As you know from the daily papers, the Greek army is fighting an open battle with large numbers of well-trained and well-equipped guerillas on the northern front.

Proposes "Openly Stated"

"Guerilla leaders have openly stated their purpose to try to set up a stooge government by force and the Greek government is faced with a much more critical security problem tha nthat which existed at the time of the President's message."

Some of the American funds would go directly for military assistance to the Greeks in their fight against the Communists. Col. Carl T. Tischbein of the Army general staff said 135 mililon dollars of the 300 million dollars for Greece would be spent on military supplies and food. He estimated 90 million dollars of the 100 million dollars for Turkey would be used on military supplies.

Actually, while most concern here at the moment is centered on the critical situation in Greece, there is also some apprehension over the next steps in development of the Marshall plan for European recovery because of differences among the United States, Britain and France over the industrial revival of western Germany.

In addition to haste on the 400 million dollars for the Greek-Turkish aid program, the Senate was told yesterday that conditions in Germany also were grave and warranted prompt action.

"Semi-Starvation" There

Testimony was heard that there is "already semistarvation" in the British-American occupied zones in Germany.

In passing a $1,603,199,094 bill Friday, the House provided $1,353,-024,000 to finance this Nation's foreign policy. It trimmed budget estimates by 12.6 per cent, but allowed the full amount of 400 million dollars requested for the Greek-Turkish aid program.

Soviets Pass Up First Meeting Called by U. S. on Jap Treaty

By The Associated Press

An apparent Russian boycott of the very first international meeting called by the United States on a Japanese peace treaty was revealed yesterday by the Soviet Embassy and admitted by the State Department.

Nine other countries were represented in the meeting, which was held in the State Department on July 11, but no Russian envoy ever showed up. There is speculation whether this is a significant indication of the way in which the Soviet Union will react to American plans for a veto-free Japanese peace conference system.

The Soviets have not directly responded to the American proposal for an 11-nation conference to begin work on Japanese peace settlement August 19 in Wasshington or San Francisco. Several other nations in the British bloc have said the date conflicts with some of their own arrangements and should be delayed.

Soviet Breaks Silence

What the Soviet Embassy did do after a week of silence was this: It issued a statement today denying a State Department press release of last Wednesday saying that a Soviet representative had been present at the July 11 session called by Assistant Secretary John H. Hilldring for the purpose of presenting the American proposals.

The Soviet statement reviewed the pertinent sections of the press release with respect to attendance and then said that "the Soviet Embassy considers it necessary to eliminate the inaccuracy contained in the above-mentioned release" because there was no Soviet representative present at the Hilldring conference.

This spurred the State Department's press section to issue a comment to this effect:

A Soviet representative was invited along with envoys of the other nine government to attend the Hilldring conference "but a Soviet representative did not actually appear."

When his absence became apparent, the department rushed out to the Russian Embassy a copy of the same proposal being given to the representatives who had appeared.

Smith Called on Molotov

At the same time this was happening, Ambassador W. B. Smith was calling on Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov in Moscow to present the proposals directly to him.

Said the State Department: "It is thus clear that all the governments were consulted simultaneously."

What was not clear from any of the statements was why the Soviets had not attended the meeting when everybody else had time to get there. Some embassies were represented by ambassadors, some by counselors.

No explanation on this point was forthcoming either from the Soviet headquarters here or from the State Department. However, from all the evidence and timing it appeared that the Soviets simply preferred to stay away.

Senate Passes Bill to Permit Cashing of Leave Bonds Sept. 1

(D., Ky.) minority leader, announced his intention to support it. His support was regarded as presaging signature by President Truman.

Under its terms some 9 million veterans, mostly former enlisted men, would be authorized to cash after September 1 bonds which were issued to them last year in lieu of pay for accrued leave. The bonds now mature five years after date of issuance.

The bill increasing living allowances provides for raising subsistence pay from the present $65 a month for single veterans to $75; for married veterans without children from $90 to $105, and for those with children from $90 to $120.

Senator Taft told the Senate the bill would cost 200 million dollars a year but was "justified."

"There is no doubt whatever," he said, "that the cost of living has increased 15 per cent over the cost at the time the present allowances were fixed. If we are going to carry out the intent of Congress at that time, there should be a 15 per cent increase in allowances and that is what this bill provides."

As for permitting veterans to cash their terminal leave bonds, Taft said he had opposed the move before defeat of the Republican effort to cut income taxes four billion dollars a year. Now, he said, there would be a six-billion-dollar Treasury surplus to be applied on the national debt.

"Payment of these bonds," he added, "will reduce the debt just as much as the payment of any other bonds."

Barkley said in announcing his support of the measure that when the original law was passed it was deemed advisable to issue bonds rather than pay cash. Since then, he said, a situation had developed which would make it "wise and fair" to permit these who desired to cash their bonds to do so.

He added that paying the bonds would have no effect on the public debt, since they would be paid either out of cash in the Treasury or funds would be borrowed to pay them. The latter course, he explained would not increase the debt, since "the Government simply will sell to someone else the bond equivalent to that which it is cashing for the veterans.

Forced Training of Males On Reaching 18 Recommended

States must maintain an adequate reserve of trained forces until world conditions are more settled.

The subcommittee that approved the bill by a vote of 7 to 1, with three members absent and another not voting, is composed of Representatives Towe (R., N.J.), chairman; Short (R., Mo.), Arends (R., Ill.), Thomas (R., N.J.), Norblad (R., Oreg.), Van Zandt (R., Pa.), Thomason (D., Tex.), Sasscer (D., Md.), Sikes (D., Fla.) and Winstead (D., Miss.). In addition, Representative Andrews (R., N.Y.), chairman of the full committee, and Representative Vinson (D., Ga.), top Democrat, are ex-officio members.

While the committee did not disclose the vote, members reported that Short voted against the bill, Arends voted "present," and Sasscer, Vinson and Van Zandt were absent.

The subcommitee bill, bearing Towe's name, calls for six months of basic military training for qualified male youths between their 18th and 20th birthdays, followed by six months of membership in an ROTC, National Guard or other reserve organization. Youths still in high school when they become 18 would be allowed to have their induction deferred, but not beyond the age of 20.

The Army has estimated that 850,000 youths would be trained annually under the plan, with the Army training about 618,000 and the Navy the remaining 232,000. So far as possible, youths would be allowed to choose their branch of the service. While in training they would be under Army or Navy direction but not subject to regular disciplinary regulations.

The would be paid $30 a month for their basic training period and would receive additional allowances of $50 monthly for one dependent and $65 monthly for more than one. They would wear regular service uniforms with distinctive insignia and would not be subject to actual military service except in time of national emergency.

The legislation specifically prohibits the operation of places of public nuisance within a reasonable distance of a training camp and would make it illegal to sell or give intoxicating liquor to any youth in training.

Horan Renews Fight for Sales Tax in District

Representative Horan (R., Wash.) yesterday revived his fight for a District general sales tax, this time for the 1948 fiscal budget year.

Chairman of the powerful House District Committee, Horan was not reticent in disclosing he sent a letter to "scores of District residents" to "hurry up" the sales tax project.

"Only the substituting of a sales tax for the income tax will correct the District's acute dilemma of increasing costs and almost stationary revenues," Horan declared.

Declaring that "the entire burden" of direct taxaton is borne "by less than a third of the total population (of the District)," Horan said only a sales tax would reach "the free riders."

Horan estimated that his sales tax program would net the District up to $11,500,000 annually. Of this sum, he believes, $3,500,000 would be paid in by visitors to the Nation's Capitol, "none of whom should object to adding a few dollars to the sum he expects to spend on his vacation or business trip here."

"Because I want to hasten approval on the part of the people who are going to pay for it," Horan explained, "I have sent a letter to scores of persons in this community whose influence I believe can hurry the process which will bring the matter again to the attention of the Commissioners and to the Congress."

Senator Harry P. Cain (R., Wash.) plans to introduce a bill this week to repeal the District individual income tax.

CIO's Murray Warns Truman Against 'Halfway' Flood Plans

CIO President Philip Murray yesterday criticized President Truman's 10-year flood control program as a wasteful "halfway plan" and urged creation of a Missouri Valley authority and similar development of other valleys.

In a letter to Mr. Truman, Murray said the White House proposal, which indorses a plan of Brig. Gen. Lewis A. Pick for the Missouri basin, was helpful in bringing the flood problem to Congress' attention.

However, Murray added, the problem of regulating the great rivers also involves irrigation, water power, soil conservation, reforestation and development of mineral resources.

Calls Pick Plan Unsound

"Appropriations to carry out the Pick plan are not the answer to this problem. Proponents of unified river valley development are satisfied that the Pick plan, even as a mere flood control and navigation program, is unsound," the letter stated.

"The current disaster must not be used as an excuse to rush ahead with construction which will waste the people's money, fail of its purpose, and postpone real valley development for a generation.

"Tinkering with halfway plans and squandering money on them is not in the interest of the people."

Murray declared the proper approach is in the MVA legislation introduced by Senator Murray (D., Mont.). "Similar legislation," he added, "should be adopted for all the other major valleys of the country."

Meanwhile, the Valley Authority Conference said yesterday senatorial hearings will be held throughout the Missouri Valley next fall on plans for a Western-type TVA.

The conference, advocate of the administration of all U. S. watersheds after the pattern of the Tennessee Valley Authority, concluded a two-day meeting setting up a permanent valley-authority organization.

Dr. Dewey Anderson, a former member of the California Legislature, chairman of the concluding session, said eight field hearings on proposed Missouri Valley Authority legislation will be held in October.

Senator Murray, whose bill has been locked in the Senate since April, and other senatorial sponsors of such legislation will conduct the hearings, Anderson said.

would ask its sponsors to lay on the line some assurances that they are not seeking regimentation, a dictatorship and that their proposals would give us some economy and some efficiency."

Culmination of Effort

It was, he declared, the culmination of "25 years of effort by military elements to gain power within the Government.

"Now, because of the fear brought by propaganda, the military seeks to, and apparently will be successful, induce Congress to abdicate its authority, to shrink its responsibility and turn over to the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to a super-military organization imposed upon our armed forces the duty of providing a national defense."

The bill does not provide for unification, Hoffman charged, but simply adds to the Army and the Navy provided for in the Constitution a third department, the Air Forces.

"Other nations have followed their military leaders in their unification and centralization schemes," Hoffman said, "giving power to military leaders.

"Hitler tried it, Mussolini tried it and Stalin has used it.

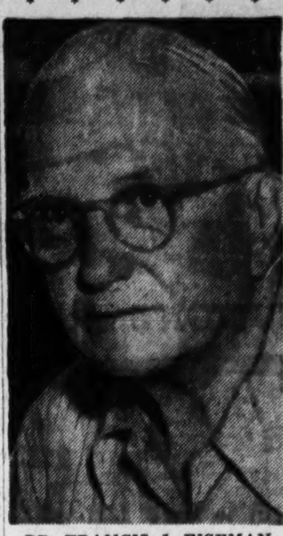
Retiring Administrator Lauds Washington Hospital Staffs

Medical and hospital staffs in Garfield and other District hospitals are "about as good as you can find anywhere," in the opinion of Dr. Francis J. Eisenman, who recently retired as administrator of Garfield Hospital after 23 years of service there.



DR. FRANCIS J. EISEMAN, retiring after 23 years as head of Garfield Hospital

Referring to criticisms of District hospitals, Dr. Eiseman declared yesterday that such criticism was justified when it applied to the physical plants of the local hospitals.

"Why, our hospital is actually falling apart," he readily admitted, but added that the medical service provided was a much more important factor.

Retired July 1

The administrator was officially retired on July 1 but stayed on for 10 days to aid his successor, A. B. Cook, former director of the Monmouth General Hospital in Long Branch, N. J.

He plans to devote much of his time to working on the grounds of his home at 6 E. Underwood st., Chevy Chase, Md., but has some future traveling in mind. Married, he has two sons and a daughter.

A native of West Point, N. Y., Dr. Eisenman first came to this area in 1896, when he began his study at the Medical College of Virginia in Richmond.

Serves in Army

After his graduation, he entered the Army medical service in 1900, remaining for 23 years through two tours of duty in the Philippines and several in the United States. During World War I he was assigned to the development of gas masks.

When he resigned from the Army in the rank of major, and joined the Garfield staff, the hospital was heavily in debt, he recalled yesterday. During his administration the several hundred thousand dollars debt has been paid off.

From 240 beds, the institution has grown to a 467-bed hospital since 1924. Daily costs have risen by at least 2½ times, with the house staff increasing from 5 to 36.

Births Show Increase

Not more than 300 babies a year were born at the hospital when he took over, Dr. Eisenman noted, and the mothers stayed 14 days. Currently more than 4000 a year are born there. The mothers, the administrator remarked, stay only a few days, and some don't even stay at all, returning home in an ambulance a few hours after delivery.

Great advances have been made in X-rays, Dr. Eisenman pointed out, and Garfield twice has expanded its facilities and still needs enlargement. The hospital, now connected with the National Cancer Institute, expects to carry on cancer research.

The 68-year-old administrator gave group hospitalization services credit for "saving" hospitals financially. But since 1941, he said, hospitals have been taking some losses as costs rise. He finds patients "a great deal more hospital-minded" than they were 20 years ago, when many were afraid to enter a hospital.

Woman Gives Birth To 13th Child After Night-Long Trek

Benton, Pa., July 19 (U.P.).—A 41-year-old mother gave birth to her 13th child after a night-long trek through heavy woods, it was disclosed today.

The child, a girl, was born yesterday to Mrs. Alton Getz of nearby Sugar Loaf Township, in a thickly wooded section a short distance from a rarely used farm road. A physician said both were in good condition today.

The birth was disclosed when Mrs. Getz staggered to a back-country farmhouse carrying the child wrapped in her dress.

Mrs. Getz had walked from her home to a neighbor's house, borrowed a small caliber rifle, then trudged eight miles through heavy woods and thickets before the baby was born. The rifle, which Mrs. Getz told the neighbor she wanted to kill a sick cow, was found nearby.

Virginia Republicans Adopt Platform Calling for 'Modernized, Progressive Constitution'

Roanoke, Va., July 19 (AP).—A comprehensive uniform party platform for legislative and local candidates in the fall elections was unanimously adopted here today by the Republican State Central Committee.

Prepared by the State Policy Committee headed by Senator S. Floyd Landreth of Galax, the platform calls for an unrestricted constitutional convention, abolition of the State Compensation Board, election of trial justices and trial judges by direct vote of the people, appointment of the Supreme Court justices by the Governor, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly; abolition of the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting, improved educational facilities, and regrouping of congressional, legislative and judicial districts.

The State Central Committee went into session at noon just after the Policy Committee, which began final draft of its program Friday afternoon, had completed its work.

State Chairman Robert H. Woods of Pearisburg, stressing the importance of harmony and co-operation in the party's ranks, declared that "We now have more candidates for State and local offices than ever before."

"Solution of Virginia's most pressing economic, cultural and political problems is now impossible except through piecemeal changes in the outmoded and often repressive fundamental laws of the commonwealth," the preamble of the platform declared.

"In the interest of good government, sound business and political morality, the Republican legislature candidates demand the calling of an unrestricted convention whose members will be elected by the people and pledged to submit a modernized and progressive constitution for ratification or rejection."

The general trend within Virginia for several generations has been a gradual loss to local government of responsibility and authority and a commensurate increase within State agencies, the platform went on.

"We regard this centralization of power as having reached a point of danger to the institutions of democracy . . . We favor more authority and responsibility being vested in the boards of supervisors and that adequate salaries be paid these officials."

Library Is Given New Lincoln Storehouse In John G. Nicolay Collection of Papers

A new mine of information about Abraham Lincoln soon will be available to the public, the Library of Congress has announced.

The personal and public papers of John G. Nicolay, Lincoln's confidential secretary and biographer, have been presented to the library by Nicolay's daughter, Miss Helen Nicolay, 3133 Connecticut ave. nw.

Miss Nicolay, lifetime Washington resident, also presented some of her own personal papers to the library, with her father's collection.

Announcement of the gift came just a week before the formal opening of the Robert Todd Lincoln collection of Lincoln papers.

Library officials, bound by Robert Todd Lincoln's will, have not divulged any information about that collection, which will be opened to the public next Saturday.

Dr. Luther Evans, Congressional librarian, announced yesterday that the Nicolay collection, now being arranged and catalogued, will be made available as soon as possible.

Bulk of the Nicolay papers consists of letters to or about Abraham Lincoln, contemporary memoranda by Nicolay of Lincoln's conferences with his cabinet officers and generals, and Nicolay's notes of Lincoln's comments on matters of public or military policy.

Library officials feel the Nicolay papers probably will be "one of the most significant collections of Lincolnia to be placed in a public repository in recent years."

Miss Nicolay previously had presented to the Congressional Library a smaller collection of Abraham Lincoln letters and materials.

Speculation is running high on what is contained in the Robert Todd Lincoln collection. It is known that Nicolay and John Hay, both secretaries to Lincoln, used the collection in preparing their 10-volume biography of Lincoln and in editing "The Complete Works of Abraham Lincoln."

Carl Sandburg, author of "The Prairie Years," and one of America's foremost Lincoln experts, is expected to be in Washington Saturday to attend the formal opening of the Lincoln papers at 4 o'clock in the Congressional Library.

He will describe the importance and significance of the Lincoln papers for Post readers in a series of articles, which will begin on July 27.

Royall In-Law I 'Explained'

ing Mr. Steel was at the eightieth birthday party of Mr. Royall's mother last year and at Christmas dinner, also at his mother's.

"The fact that Mr. Steel is a brother-in-law of Mr. Royall is well known and has been commented on in the press previously."

Royall, a 59-year-old North Carolina lawyer, had an Army career covering both World Wars. He was a brigadier general in the Judge Advocate's Division when he was named Undersecretary of War in 1945 to succeed Patterson, who became Secretary at that time.

Steel ran unsuccessfully for Congress from an Eastside New York district a couple of years ago as a candidate of the leftwing American Labor Party. He was indorsed enthusiastically by the Daily Worker, New York Communist newspaper, and by Henry A. Wallace, then Secretary of Commerce. Last spring, when Russia compelled the State Department to limit the number of United States newsmen who could accompany Secretary of State George C. Marshall to the Moscow Conference, Steel failed to qualify for a State Department recommendation that he be included in the group. But he turned up in Moscow on his own and subsequently toured the area behind the iron curtain. He was received by Soviet Premier Joseph Stalin and interviewed Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia.

Proxy Virginian Is a Hit in Japan

There is something new under the Rising Sun.

It's what you'd call dancing with a dolly, a life-sized one named Gilda.

Mrs. Mary Eastham, 5413 22d rd., North, Arlington, heard about it through her daughter, Miss Ann Eastham, a recreational worker with the Red Cross, who really started it all.

Miss Eastham, who has been in Japan since last December, and some of the boys in the service got together and made a life-sized dummy of Miss Eastham. Now the boys in the service take turns, each night, "dancing with Gilda."

The pay-off on the "dancing with Gilda" habit came recently, Miss Eastham wrote her mother, when she was carrying Gilda home one night.

As she was crossing a Yokohama street, she was stopped by two officers who mistook Gilda for a flesh-and-blood character who had been injured.

After the explanations which followed, one of the officers made a date with Gilda for a dance. On the appointed night, he called for Gilda (and incidentally for Miss Eastman). Now that Gilda has made her formal debut she is, according to Miss Eastman, one of the most popular dance floor companions in Yokohama.

This is the middle of the story and heaven knows what happens next. When it does, we'll let you know.

Veterans' Aid Center Is Still Showplace for City's Heart

Quarter of Million Given Assistance During 18 Months

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

The ex-GI said he needed assistance about the GI Bill and his rights.

It was strictly routine, and the District Veterans Service Center was glad to help.

The ex-GI added wistfully he'd like to get a job. The center helped him with that. And when the ex-GI's girl got out of the service the center helped her find a job so they could get married.

But playing Cupid wasn't quite enough. There was the question of a place to live. A tough obstacle to be sure, but the center cleared it.

Letter Praises Work

Then came the former GI's big opportunity. A job overseas with the Government. Now the question was could he take his bride along. The center investigated, came up with an affirmative answer, found the wife a job overseas, just where hubby would be working, and even helped arrange transportation together for a honeymoon.

Albert, the former GI, and Betty, his former GI wife, were grateful. To Col. Waldron E. Leonard, center director, they wrote:

"The Center has surely proved to be a God-send to us . . . In a city such as Washington, where information is so difficult to 'dig' out, there is indeed a pressing need for an efficient . . . center and your outfit surely fits this need to a T."

Colonel Leonard and his staff are proud of that letter, as they are proud of the hundreds of other written expressions.

In the 18 months of its operations, the center and its staff of 23 have assisted nearly a quarter of a million veterans with information and service. Between 200 and 300 veterans still stream daily into the center at 1400 Pennsylvania ave. nw.

Many Are Repeaters

Most of the center "customers" are returning for the second, third, or nth time because they like the service. For example, Jerome Sayper, 33, of 1502 20th st. nw., an Army veteran who served on Ascension Island, has been to the center at least a dozen times. He explains it this way:

"I discovered that the center was a place I could turn to for help and get it. I've got an idea, a business idea. I want to get it started. I didn't have a single contact, but through the center I've met all kinds of business leaders for counsel and advice. The thing is that the center tries to help."

Or take the case of Donald R. Farrar, a 30-year-old disabled veteran of 3709 Jocelyn st. nw., who cannot use the right side of his body. Through the Veterans Center, Farrar was able to get a car he could drive, found a house near Mount Alto where he could receive out-patient treatment, and was assisted in filing an amended claim for reimbursement of medical expenses.

Costs 59 Cents Per Veteran

The center was set up late in December of 1945 as the District's helping hand to its returning veterans. It has cost the District exactly $117,300 to operate thus far—or 59 cents per veteran assisted.

TRANSPORTATION IS FREE—Col. Waldron E. Leonard, director of the Veterans Center, gets a warm handshake from Donald Farrar, former Army Ground Forces fighter who is now partially paralyzed. They are pictured as Don received his new car from the Government outside the Veterans Center on Pennsylvania ave., between 13th and 14th sts. nw.

In terms of goodwill to the community and Nation, good citizenship, and good neighborliness, the center has returned its appropriation many times over to the city treasury. The center has proved to the homecoming GIs that the District has a heart.

The first flood of veterans—400 to 500 daily—wanted general information about the GI Bill of Rights. Then they wanted specific information and help.

The center staff, assisted by representatives of the United States Employment Service, War Assets Administration, Civil Service Commission, Veterans' Administration, Red Cross, U. S. Insurance Underwriters, and others, tried to give the information and service on the spot. Otherwise, appointments were made with the people who could give direct assistance.

After the first few months, the type of service sought by the veterans became more complex. Scores of home-hungry GIs put up deposits up to $5400 with developers who promised to build them homes. When several builders failed to live up to their promises, the center persuaded them to give back thousands of dollars in deposits to the desperate ex-GIs. Others were given legal aid and counsel.

The center did an outstanding job on terminal leave pay for enlisted men. Application blanks were available at the center even before they were distributed through the postoffices. Trained aides helped the veterans fill out the forms. Photostatic paper—an expensive item—was obtained in large enough quantities to meet the heavy demand for photographing of discharge papers.

Requests for aid run the full gamut of veterans' day-to-day problems.

Maybe the veteran put up $10 for a correspondence course and finds that he has contracted to pay $240 more for something he decides he didn't really want in the first place.

Maybe the former GI thinks he has had a raw deal in loss of promotion or position in a government civil service reorganization.

Red Tape Cut Cheerfully

Maybe the landlord wants to evict the former GI from a house or apartment.

Whatever the problem, the center is sure to offer help. That doesn't mean, of course, that the veteran will always get what he believes he wants. But he will get information, advice and assistance. And if it's a question of red tape, it's just something the center staff just loves to cut.

One small incident shows this personalized service better than statistics can.

There are two huge trailer tires in the center right now. A veteran who put up $50 for a trailer, demanded the two tires as collateral when the owner was unable to present clear title to the vehicle. The veteran had to leave town. It was only natural that he turn to the center, asking that they hold the tires for him.

ROTC Visitors To See 'Battle' At Fort Meade

Fort Meade, Md., will be liberated from "enemy soldiers" holding the post and the main lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad in demonstrations for ROTC students Monday and Tuesday.

Many of the members of the Reserve Officers Training Corps witnessing the show Tuesday afternoon will be from Washington schools.

The First Battalion, 325th Glider Infantry Regiment will stage the field demonstration featured by simulated mortar fire, blank cartridge fire and flame throwers.

Demonstrations will be given at 8 a. m. and 1 p. m. each day.

Victor and Twining Telephone Exchanges Are Cut Into System—Tear Off That Sticker

You can tear that sticker off the front of your telephone directory.

At exactly 11:55 last night, the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. cut into the Washington System the facilities of its new Victor-Twining central office, 28th and N sts. se.

By midnight, the completed operation gave telephone service to thousands of new subscribers in the southeast part of Washington this side of the Anacostia River. Within a few weeks, company crews are expected to have installed telephones for more than 15,000 waiting customers.

The new $900,000 building establishes the Victor and Twining exchnges, already listed in the June directory, takes some load off the existing Franklin and Ludlow switchboards and takes over most of the Capitol Heights, Hillside, Locust and Spruce calls. All are dial service, except Ludlow, the city's only manually operated exchange.

The first call over the new system was made by Public Utilities Commissioner James W. Lauderdale to E. J. Milligan, the commission's executive secretary. Witnessing the ceremony at the new building were C. & P. officials J. B. Morrison, vice president and general manager; John M. Howard, general commercial manager, and John L. Porter, Victor manager.

Part of a 46-million-dollar expansion program, the new building culminates expenditure of $3,300,000 in Southeast Washington alone. Putting the new center into service entailed laying seven miles of underground conduit, about 37 miles of cable and thousands of miles of wire, company officers said.

U. S. to Permit Tours In Southern Germany

Berlin, July 19 (AP).—The American military government announced today it had given foreign travel bureaus permission to conduct a limited number of guided tours in the three southern laender (states) of the United States occupation zone—Bavaria, Wurtemberg-Baden, and Hesse.

Under the plan, announced by John S. Power, special assistant for policy in AMG's trade and commerce branch, the tours probably will be inaugurated next month by the American Express Co. Any allied and neutral nationals would be eligible.

The Finalists In Beauty Show

Chosen at the Atlas Theater in the contest to select "Miss Washington" were, top to bottom, Mary Ann Moffett, 19, 1105 Woodside pkwy., Silver Spring; Drew Dawson, 22, of 4909 45th st. nw., and Florence Frye, 19, of 901-B st. ne.

Housewives Indorse Food Prices Probe

More than 12,000 Greater Washington housewives have signed petitions urging congressional investigation of food prices, the Washington Committee for Consumer Protection reported last night.

Volunteer workers were rained out for a time yesterday forenoon, Miss Mary Gresham, acting committee chairman, said, but housewives response to the start of committee's "Don't Buy Meat Week" campaign has been almost wholly favorable.

A check of a number of markets by a Washington Post reporter yesterday revealed that some stores have not felt the effect of the strike at all—others reported meat sales had dropped off as much as 40 per cent the past few days.

Many of the housewives approached mentioned the proposal of Senator Raymond Baldwin (R., Conn.) for a general investigation of the cost of living, Miss Gresham said.

Senator Baldwin's resolution, approved by the Senate Banking Committee, would appropriate $100,000 for an inquiry to be conducted during the recess of Congress.

Hutchinson to Speak At Arlington Rally

Richmond Attorney Mark A. Hutchinson, Democratic opponent of Senator Harry F. Byrd (D., Va.) in the last Democratic primary, will address a political rally Thursday in the Washington-Lee High School auditorium.

The rally is being sponsored by the Progressive Democrats of Arlington, who describe themselves as "non-machine" Democrats. Hutchinson, Secretary of the Commonwealth for Virginia from 1927 to 1930, currently heads the Committee for Democracy in Virginia.

Candidates Invited

The Arlington Better Government League has invited all announced or prospective candidates to the Arlington County Board to speak at its meeting next Wednesday at 8 p. m. in the Lyon Park Community House. Announced board candidates to date are incumbents F. Freeland Chew and Harry W. Cuppett; Mrs. Florence Cannon, Mrs. Charles E. Planck and T. Oscar Smith.

Boots Fixed in Year By Soviet Repair Shop

Moscow, July 19.—A. Viktorov, who has waited for more than one year to get his leather boots repaired by a state cooperative shop, did not wait in vain. It was announced today that his boots have been repaired and that Comrade Vinogradov, manager of the repair shop, has been fired for bureaucracy.

Another bureaucrat, Comrade Parshin, who gave returning war veterans the runaround when the latter applied for living quarters, has also been removed from office.

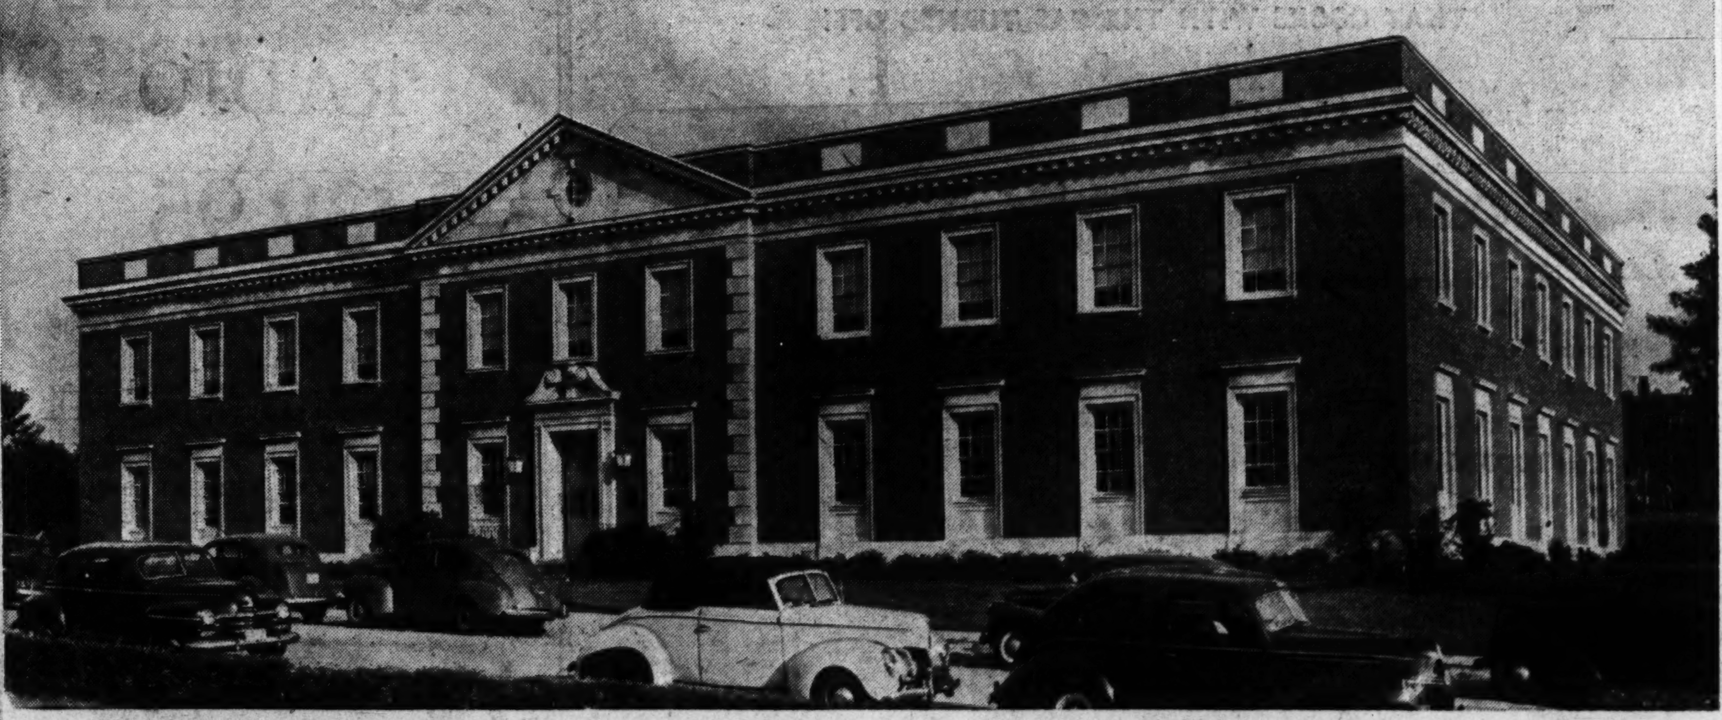
A PROMISE FULFILLED!



The new Anacostia Telephone Building and equipment—$3,300,000 answer to telephone shortages in Southeast Washington—was placed in operation last night at midnight. New dial center will serve thousands of telephones.

For many months we have been promising that Washington's overloaded telephone system would be expanded and improved as fast as the materials, equipment and manpower could be assembled for the job.

At the stroke of midnight, last night, that promise began to be fulfilled, as the first calls began to click through the new $3,300,000 dial center at 28th and N Streets, S.E.

To many of our present customers, this new dial center will bring finer, faster service. And within the next few weeks, as fast as new cable lines can be built and connections made, it will enable us to serve more than 15,000 customers in Southeast Washington who have been waiting for telephones.

The entire problem of telephone shortages in Washington isn't solved yet. But the new Anacostia Telephone Building is a great step forward in our $46,000,000 program to provide better service for more people throughout this area.

• Don't miss OPEN HOUSE at this new building July 30, 31 and August 1, 6:30 to 9:30 P. M. You'll enjoy this visit behind the scenes of your telephone system in action.

Home Building Tops 20-Year Mark in June, Creedon Says

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

More new homes were started and more completed in June than in any month in 20 years, Housing Expediter Frank R. Creedon reported yesterday.

Creedon said 75,000 new permanent homes were started last month, compared with 72,500 in May and 64,100 in June last year.

The total for the first six months of this year, he said, also set a new 20-year record, with 358,000 new homes started, compared with 340,100 last year.

In June, he said, 62,800 new pedmanent units were completed, a new postwar high, more than double last year's 30,600.

In the first half of this year 362,000 new homes were competed, he said, against 128,600 for last year.

Creedon predicted that the present high rate of building would continue through July and August, in spite of the lifting of controls on nonresidential construction June 30.

Newsprint Measure Is Passed by House

By The Associated Press

The House passed unanimously and sent to the Senate yesterday legislation authorizing duty-free importation of newsprint in roles not less than 15 inches wide.

Under present law rolls not less than 16 inches wide may be imported duty-free. This was suspended during the war but became effective again July 1.

Behling Nomination To FPC Up Tuesday

After an opening hearing yesterday, the Senate Commerce Committee announced it would consider the nomination of Burton N. Behling to the Federal Power Commission Tuesday morning at an executive session.

Behling, whose home is Washington, D. C., testified at yesterday's hearing.

Only 'Handful' of Scrap Metal Salvage Seen in Navy War Wreckage in Pacific

Only a handful of Navy scrap iron and steel is worth salvaging from the uncounted wreckage of war scattered across the Pacific, experts estimated yesterday.

A two-man civilian committee reported after a 22,000-mile tour of the Pacific for the Secretary of Navy that:

Guam has 15,000 tons of scrap Navy trucks, jeeps, tractors, cranes, tanks and landing craft worth returning to the United States. Help from the Navy will be needed in trucking and loading the material. This was the only Navy scrap to be reported favorably by the committee.

Manila has 50,000 to 75,000 tons of scrap for sale by the Philippines government. Most of 84 sunken Japanese and American ships cannot be raised from the bay and wouldn't be worth it anyway.

100,000 in Subic Bay

Subic Bay holds 100,000 tons of scrap landing craft that could be salvaged, but it might not pay the cost of the operations. These craft have been turned over by the Navy to the office of foreign liquidation commission.

Manus and Samar, big wartime bases now rusting back in the jungle, have about 15,000 tons, but scrapping it is not feasible.

One "accumulation" of military vehicles on Manus was "so completely covered by jungle growth that inspection and estimate of the quantity was not possible," the report said.

"Within another six months the entire accumulation at Manus will have depreciated because of the elements to the extent that it will be of little or no commercial value."

Gas Is Expensive

Cost of a scrap operation in the Pacific is boosted by the high cost of the gases used for cutting the metal into chunks.

Gas costing 65 cents per cylinder at Honolulu sells for $10 at Manila, the experts said.

The survey was made by Leslie G. Knight of Bethlehem Pacific Coast Steel Corp., Seattle, representing the American Iron and Steel Institute, and Leonard I. Abrams of Atlas Steel & Supply Co., Cleveland, representing the Institute of Scrap Iron and Steel.

The Navy said it was arranging details of offering its Guam scrap to private industry and would help in preparing it for shipment.

Dinner and Reception Will Honor Pastor

A dinner-reception honoring the Rev. Timothy N. MacCarthy, pastor of St. Margaret's Church, Seat Pleasant, Md., will be given at 7:30 p. m. Thursday at the Lafayette Hotel.

Sponsors are the Commodore John Barry Division and Ladies Auxiliary of the Ancient Order of Hibernians.

The Rev. Mr. McCarthy, chaplain of the two Washington groups of the order, will be presented a testimonial gift to commemorate completion of 25 years in the priesthood.

Coal Exports Of 29,837,000 Tons Set Mark

The United States reported a record-breaking 29,837,000 long tons of coal during the 12 months ended June 30, the Government reported yesterday.

Such high shipments must continue, it added if world reconstruction is to go forward.

Household and industrial coal users in this country, meanwhile, were urged to stock up next winter's supplies early, both for transportation and production reasons.

"If this is done," Capt. Granville Conway, coordinator of emergency export programs, said in a statement, "there should be adequate coal supplies for all American consumers next winter with no conflict with the export program."

Conway's report was made public by John R. Steelman, assistant to President Truman.

In a separate statement, Steelman said the report showed that while essential requirements for some European countries were not fully met in the last fiscal year, American coal exports "were of vital assistance to world reconstruction."

At the same time, he said, the report indicates the need of continuing exports at a high level this year. He declared the shortage of coal, perhaps more than any other single factor, had slowed down world recovery.

"It is gratifying, therefore," he said, "that the United States was able to ship abroad—and to places where it was most gravely needed—record-breaking amounts of coal, and to do this in spite of production and shipping difficulties, without denying the needs of American consumers and industry."

France, with 7,983,000 tons, received more United States coal last year than any other nation. Italy was next with 5,965,000 tons. Others receiving more than one million tons were Belgium, 2,582,000; Netherlands, 2,334,000; Denmark, 1,850,000; Sweden, 1,469,000; Norway, 1,043,000, and Brazil, 1,209,000.

The export figure excludes rail and lake shipments to Canada and rail shipments to Mexico, which are normally considered United States domestic coal markets.

81 YEARS OF RELIABILITY

Choose a Cemetery Carefully

One thing about Rock Creek Cemetery that will impress you strongly is the quiet, refined atmosphere. Its beauty is Nature's handiwork, interspersed with memorials by famous masters.

Rock Creek Cemetery

In its sublimely perfect condition, it is hard to realize that it is over two hundred years old—but it is under the management of a continuing Board of Trustees—with an endowment fund adequate to insure perpetual care.

Rock Creek Cemetery is conveniently located in-town; in a protected environment. Non-sectarian and non-speculative.

We invite your investigation of available lots and sites—at very reasonable prices—with budgeted terms if desired—and urge your critical INVESTIGATION.

Visiting Hours: 9 a.m. to sundown daily and Sunday. Office Hours: Sunday and holidays, 9 to Noon. Weekdays, 9 to 4:30.

The THERMOWELL
For Top of Stove Cooking With the Gas Turned Off!

10 Minutes' Gas
—cooks any three ordinary fresh vegetables, fruits or cereals at once, on one small burner—in the Thermowell—an exclusive "gas-off" unit.

20 Minutes' Gas
—cooks beans, meat, soup; complete meals for the small family in the Thermowell—or in the Chambers Oven—another "gas-off" unit.

30 Minutes' Gas
—cooks the average complete meal of meat, vegetables and dessert for six or eight people in the Oven that cooks with the gas turned off—requiring only 5 minutes' gas per pound of meat—another astounding Chambers service.

WHEN you cook on a Chambers Range you can start a complete meal of meat, vegetables and dessert for four to eight people at your own convenience. Burn the gas for only twenty or thirty minutes . . . then turn off the gas! Your Chambers Range finishes the cooking on stored heat (gas off completely) and does so in the same length of time required by ordinary methods. The food need not be removed when done, as nothing can possibly burn or scorch with the gas turned off. Hours later a hot dinner can be carried directly to the table!

Perlman Hearing Nears Last Act

Committee Vote on Solicitor General Nomination of Jan. 31 Due Tomorrow

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

The full Senate Judiciary Committee is scheduled to vote tomorrow on the nomination of Philip B. Perlman, Baltimore attorney, to be Solicitor General.

For more than nine months, the United States has been without the services of a Solicitor General to represent the Government before the Supreme Court.

Meanwhile, a Senate subcommittee headed by Senator Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.) has set a record for this Congress in the length of its hearings on the qualifications of President Truman's nominee.

Antagonism Charged

Perlman, a Democrat, has the unanimous indorsement of the entire Maryland congressional delegation, including the Republican members. As hearings dragged along, Perlman charged that the subcommittee, particularly Ferguson, had been antagonistic and hostile to his nomination.

The other two members of the subcommittee are Senators Forrest C. Donnell (R., Mo.) and J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.). McGrath has hotly championed Perlman on the floor of the Senate.

If Ferguson votes against confirmation and McGrath votes for it, Donnell obviously becomes the key figure in the subcommittee. His vote will determine whether or not the subcommittee hands in a favorable report to the full committee tomorrow.

Donnell's vote can by no means be taken for granted as hostile to the nominee. Despite his close, persistent and lengthy questioning of the nominee, Donnell has manifested no personal hostility.

Refused New Clients

Perlman, meanwhile, has suffered a severe cut in his income as an attorney. After he was named to be Solicitor General, he refused new clients and dropped virtually all but one of the clients he had when he was nominated.

Whatever the subcommittee decides, the odds are better than 50-50 that the full committee will recommend the nomination favorably to the Senate. The committee has seven Republican and six Democratic members. One of the Republicans, Senator William Langer (R., N. Dak.) has already demonstrated, in siding with the Democrats in the Kansas City vote fraud case, that he does not hesitate to ignore party lines.

Incidentally, this nomination has never been made a party issue. It has not come before the GOP policy committee or the Republican conference.

Congress and the subcommittee can be blamed only for part of the delay that has deprived the Nation of the services of a Solicitor General.

Blame Seen Shared

The chronology below indicates that the White House must share part of the blame.

July, 1946: J. Howard McGrath announced he would resign as Solicitor General to run for the Senate.

October 7, 1946: McGrath's resignation became effective. (He was subsequently elected to the Senate from Rhode Island.)

January 31, 1947: President Truman sent Perlman's nomination to the Senate.

May 14, 1947: The subcommittee opened hearings. Senators Millard E. Tydings and Herbert R. O'Conor, both Democrats, lauded the nominee. So also did all members of the House from Maryland, including the two Republicans, Representatives Edward T. Miller and J. Glenn Beall. Thomas D'Alesandro, newly elected mayor of Baltimore, joined his former House colleagues in indorsing the nominee. Tydings said Perlman, who was city editor of the Baltimore Sun at 23 and studied law on the side, "as hard-working a public servant" as he had ever met. Miller testified to the "universal esteem" in which the nominee was held by the Maryland State Bar.

First for Opposition

May 15, 1947: The first opposition witness was heard. She was Miss Aimee Weber, president of the National Housewives Inc. of Baltimore, which, she explained, is not a national organization. Her opposition to Perlman sprang from events of 19 years back when he was seeking a tax reduction for United Railways, which later became the Baltimore Transit Co. Two other "housewives" testified briefly. They were Mrs. Charles Fowler and Mrs. Blanche Heusler. The "housewives" from that day on made themselves much at home with the committee, sitting at the committee table and, when hearings were prolonged, nibbling there on candy bars, peanuts and mints.

A. Francis Ritota, president of the Park Heights Civic Improvement Association of Baltimore, also testified against Perlman, whom he called "a very brilliant lawyer," but a "politician." Ritota complained because Perlman was at one and the same time an attorney for the Baltimore Transit Co. and an unpaid adviser to the Governor. Ritota called Perlman "the shrewd, intellectual type of politician" who does not mix with "small fry."

Perlman Replies

May 20, 1947: Ritota continued his testimony. Perlman answered it briefly. Douglas W. McGregor, assistant to Attorney General Tom Clark, placed in the record numerous resolutions indorsing Perlman. These include laudatory statements from the Mayor of Baltimore City and the City Council; the Maryland State Bar Association, the Bar Association of Baltimore City; the Maryland State Senate; the Maryland State Legislature; the Baltimore Housing Authority; the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra; the Baltimore Museum of Art; Walters Art Gallery; and the Baltimore, Maryland Institute for the Promotion of Mechanic Arts.

May 27, 1947: Perlman's testimony was resumed. Tydings presented many Marylanders who wanted to indorse Perlman. Most of them were not called to testify.

They were Judge W. Conwell Smith, chief judge of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City; G. C. A. Anderson, former president, Baltimore Bar Association; Judge Lindley Sloan, former chief judge of the Court of Appeals of Maryland and "one of the great men of the Republican Party"; Judge Charles Markell, Maryland Court of Appeals; Judge William L. Henderson, Court of Appeals; Judge Samuel K. Dennis, former chief judge, Baltimore Supreme Bench; Charles K. G. Evans, former city solicitor, Baltimore; Paul M. Higinbotham, president, Baltimore Bar Association; William R. Semans, Ralph Warnken and Samuel J. Fisher, all former presidents of the bar association, and Judge Emory H. Niles, a member of the Baltimore Supreme Bench.

Perlman disclosed he averaged some $15,000 a year from his practice, had a personal fortune of about $200,000 and represented many civic organizations like the Baltimore Symphony without fee. Judge W. Conwell Smith presented a signed statement from 10 of the 11 judges of Baltimore's Supreme Bench praising Perlman as having had "a praiseworthy and distinguished career."

Accepts Perlman's Word

Wilmer C. Carter, a Maryland State Senator, testified he thought Perlman had appeared before the Maryland Legislative Council in connection with some racing bill. Perlman denied it and Carter said he would accept Perlman's word for it. Judge Samuel Dennis told the committee that in his opinon, Perlman, as adviser to Governor Ritchie, had "accomplished . . . the finest piece of constructive craftsmanship as happened in Maryland in my time."

June 13, 1947: Perlman and Bennet Crain, an attorney of Mount Victoria, Md., were witnesses. Crain indorsed Perlman. Ferguson asked Perlman if he agreed with a letter from Judge Ogle Marbury, chief judge of the Maryland Court of Appeals, protesting the "unfair" character of the hearings. Perlman said he did.

June 14, 1947: Perlman's cross-examination was continued. Most of the testimony revolved about the so-called Kennedy case. Joseph Kennedy, a client of Perlman's, received an incorrect tax bill, his property being assessed at $20,000 less than it should have been; and later a city employe, convicted of tax fraud, said he connived with Kennedy to lower the assessment. Perlman demonstrated the correctness of his position as an attorney.

June 16, 1947: Perlman's cross-examination renewed. Most of it revolved around trivial details of his legal practice.

June 17, 1947: Perlman, Claude M. Gray, president of the Baltimore Transit Co.; Robert Marsden Smith of Baltimore and F. R. Cross, attorney general for the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., testified. At the hearing, which fell on a Tuesday, Perlman disclosed that the previous Thursday he had been asked to produce all his income tax returns for the last 10 years, and all his books, accounts, record of income and disbursements.

Material Produced

The record shows all the material was produced the following morning. The transit company officials were questioned largely on whether or not their main reason for engaging Perlman was because of his political influence. They denied it. The hearing proved only that Perlman asked the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad either to reduce his retainer or give him some work to do.

July 1, 1947: Theodore Roosevelt McKeldin, former Republican Mayor of Baltimore, who was defeated by D'Alesandro, and Simeon E. Sobeloff, Republican city solicitor, testified. McKeldin was supenaed in the supposition he would testify against Perlman. Instead, he said Perlman was "a man of high character" who would "make a good Solicitor General." Sobeloff said Perlman was a man of integrity, good repute, and a capable lawyer and added, "I hope he will be confirmed."

July 8, 1947: Paul A. Ahlstrom, secretary-treasurer of the Automatic Voting Machine Co. of Jamestown, N. Y., testified. Search of Perlman's records showed the Automatic Voting Machine Co. had been one of his clients, and by his questions the subcommittee chairman indicated he wanted to show that Perlman was retained because of his political influence. The subcommittee met at 12:05 p. m.; recessed at 12:10 p. m.; met again at 3:40 p. m., for a 2:30 hearing; recessed at 3:45 and called for an executive session for that night.

July 10, 1947: Executive session.

July 11, 1947: Executive session.

Indorsed by Republicans

July 12, 1947: Perlman, Ahlstrom, Wendell D. Allen, of Armstrong, Machen & Allen, also solicitors for the Automatic Voting Machine Co., and Samuel C. Hamilton of Springer, N. Mex., 76-year-old agent for the company, testified. The committee met at 9:30 a. m. and recessed at 10:20 p. m. The line of questioning again tried to show the exercise of political influence. Ferguson unsuccessfully tried to show Perlman was paid on a commission instead of a retainer basis. Allen, a Republican, indorsed Perlman.

ADD 3 PERLMAN . . . .

July 14, 1947: Perlman and Ahlstrom had another go-round on the voting machines. John G. Barrett, city collector of Baltimore, and Frank Fitzpatrick, director of the Department of Assessments, Baltimore, brought in original records in regard to the Kennedy tax affair. Tydings demanded to know why so much time had been spent on this tax matter since nobody had charged that Perlman had altered the records, if the records were altered. Tydings, asked and Ferguson agreed to swear in Committee Counsel Robert P. Young as a witness.

Perlman forced Young to admit that he had seen a number of Baltimore lawyers and asked at least one to testify against Perlman. Young admitted he had been unable to find any Maryland attorneys, Republican or Democrat, to testify against the nominee. Young quoted Charles Ruzicka, G. W. S. Musgrave and Charles Jackson as being opposed to the nomination of Perlman. He quoted Ruzicka as saying Perlman was "not qualified" for the job of Solicitor General.

Ruzicka Denies It

Thursday, July 17: Ruzicka testified that he had never said that Perlman wasn't qualified. "On the contrary, I told Senator Ferguson that if I had a vote on the committee I would vote him out of the committe for confirmation."

Musgrave sent in a letter to say that he had never voiced opposition to Perlman's confirmation, and Jackson did likewise. Jackson said Perlman was the "victim of petty politics" and added that "many persons state that other un-American reasons are responsible for objections raised." Ahlstrom appeared once again on the voting machine question, and Russell G. Griffen, Jamestown, N. Y., also testified on the voting machines. Griffen, a salesman, agreed with both Ferguson and Perlman. The fact that Perlman was friendly with Baltimore's mayor was a good reason for employing him as counsel, and on the other hand maybe it wasn't after all.

Tuberculosis Serum Ready At U. of Illinois

Chicago, July 19 (U.P.).—The University of Illinois announced today that it will manufacture for Nation-wide distribution a tuberculosis vaccine which some scientists believe may some day eliminate the disease as one of the worst killers known to man.

Dr. Andrew C. Ivy, physiologist and university vice president, said the serum, known as BCG can be manufactured at a cost of only half-cent a dose.

If funds are sufficient. The university hopes to provide the vaccine to city, State and Federal health agencies free of charge.

Ivy said BCG, developed in France from live TB germs, offers great hope for stamping out the disease which kills more persons in the 18 to 40 age group than any other and is seventh on the list of all fatal diseases in the United States.

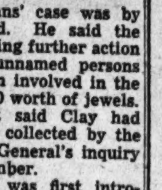
"If BCG is given every child and adult not now infected with tuberculosis, I am convinced that within 20 to 40 years we can eliminate the need for sanitariums treating the disease at a cost of millions," Ivy said.

The effects last five to seven years, about the length of many smallpox vaccinations, he said.

The project was proposed by the United States Public Health Service, after the service found that BCG vaccination "apparently confers increased resistance to tuberculosis."

General Draws Clay's Censure

Frankfurt, July 19 (U.P.).—Gen. Lucius D. Clay, European commander, believed Maj. Gen. James M. Bevans, U. S. Army personnel director of Europe, "displayed extremely poor judgment" in bestowing gifts of rich silver, looted from Kronberg Castle, on a former WAC captain, a statement said today.



Bevens

A spokesman added that Bevans' case was by no means closed. He said the Army is considering further action against certain unnamed persons said to have been involved in the theft of $1,500,000 worth of jewels.

The statement said Clay had studied evidence collected by the Army Inspector General's inquiry begun last November.

Bevans' name was first introduced in the jewel theft trials by Capt. Leola Birmingham, formerly of G-1, who said in a written statement the general "picked up" a valuable perfume bottle and a silver picture frame in the castle's cellar and gave them to her.

In a later visit to the general's billet, she said, she saw a silver candelabra and a set of demitasse cups which Bevans told her also came from the cache at the castle.

Bevans today commented only, "My conscience is clear—I have nothing to worry about."

Clay himself said there would be no action against Bevans "until final action against the principals in the case has been taken by the United States Government."

Col. Jack W. Durant, convicted of stealing the jewels from the Hesse family hideaway and smuggling them into the United States, was sentenced to 15 years of hard labor and dismissal from the Army.

Said to Have Accepted Stein

Durant testified that Bevans had accepted a silver beer stein from the Hesse silver collection as a "souvenir." Bevans was Durant's superior in G-1.

Major David F. Watson, who worked with Durant in G-1, also mentioned the silver stein.

The third principal, WAC Capt. Kathleen Nash Durant, who later married Durant, drew a sentence of five years.

Travel Restrictions To Be Eased in Reich

The War Department said yesterday that civilians soon will be permitted to visit aged or ailing relatives in Germany.

This easing of restrictions to permit travel to the United States and British occupation zones of Germany for "compassionate reasons" will be ordered as soon as conditions permit, said an announcement by the civil affairs committee.

A quota of 400 persons for the United States zone and 50 for the British zone during each three-month period will be set.

Dunn Elected To Head DAV District Units

Representatives of nine local chapters of the Disabled American Veterans held two meetings yesterday at the Burlington Hotel in conjunction with their twenty-sixth annual convention.

Donald H. Dunn, Arlington, was elected department commander for Washington at the 1 p. m. meeting. A veteran of World War II, he is now serving as a national service officer for the DAV.

Other positions went to William T. Slattery, 1929 Otis st. ne., senior vice commander, and Kenneth Wiper, 1007 Rhode Island ave. ne., adjutant.

The members of the afternoon session, estimated to number 100, also drew up a resolution to be sent to the national convention at Las Vegas, Nev., August 17-23. It urged all DAV chapters to prevent the taking away from disabled veterans any benefits granted by Congress.

Chester F. Naumowicz, manager of the Veterans' Administration, Washington Regional Office, and Dr. Charles M. Griffith, manager of the Alto Veterans Hospital, were the principal speakers at the evening banquet at the Burlington which began at 7 p. m.

State Department Guest

Miami Beach, Fla., July 19 (AP).—Carlos Lozano, former vice president of Colombia, arrived here yesterday en route to Washington where he will be a guest of the State Department.

4980 Slain in Terror Reign After Attempt to Kill Hitler

London (Sunday), July 20 (AP).—More than 4980 Germans were shot, hanged or tortured to death in a reign of terror which followed the unsuccessful attempt to assassinate Adolf Hitler July 20, 1944, the British Admiralty announced today.

"The terror which followed (the attempt) was one of the worst that Hitler ever organized against his own people," the admiralty said in a report based on German naval documents.

"The revolt was essentially a revolt from the top," the report stated. "It was impossible under the regime of Himmler's Gestapo for ordinary people to take part."

The report traced the beginning of the revolt, led by Col. Gen. Ludwig Beck, back in 1938, when he resigned as chief of staff in protest against the intended invasion of Czechoslovakia.

High Officers Involved

Beck's movement later was joined by Count von Moltke, Dr. Karl Goerdeler, former Mayor of Leipzig; Count Friedrich Werner von der Schulenberg, former Ambassador to Moscow; Field Marshal Edwin von Witzleben, Col. Gen. Erich Hoepner, Gen. Freidrich Olbright and Admiral Walter Wilhelm Canaris, chief of the intelligence division.

The report said it was necessary to gain the cooperation of most of the Army commanders who were capable of seizing power, "but the one great obstacle to obtaining the sympathy of the Army was the personal oath of loyalty which all officers had taken to Hitler."

"Hitler's crimes alone would seem to have been sufficient reason for breaking such an oath. But to the German officer nothing less than the death of Hitler could absolve them from their obligations," the report continued.

"For the success of Beck's movement, therefore, the assassination of Hitler was a sine qua non (necessity)."

Hatred Was Motive

Col. Count von Stauffenberg became a supporter of the movement when the defeat of Germany became certain, and his "vigorous and dashing personality gave an added impetus to the movement," the Admiralty reported.

The report explained that the motives behind the plan were hatred of Hitler, and belief that, rather than surrender, he would "drag the whole nation to destruction with him."

Von Stauffenberg was to assassinate Hitler at Rastenburg, Witzleben was to assume command of the army, and Gen. von Fromm, as head of the home army, was to seize Berlin. All communications with the German high command were to be cut.

"As soon as order had been established, Goerdeler and Beck were to form a government and sue for peace with the Allies," the report said. "They realized that the Allies would only accept unconditional surrender, but they believed that however harsh the terms they would still have saved many lives and prevented the further destruction of Germany.

Several Slip-ups

"The plan miscarried, firstly, because Von Stauffenberg did not wait to make sure that Hitler was dead, secondly, because the communications were not secured, and thirdly, because Fromm, uncertain of Hitler's death, betrayed the movement."

(Witnesses at the attempted assassination said that Count von Stauffenberg, a one-armed and one-legged hero of the First World War, placed a bomb under Hitler's chair at a staff meeting. Stauffenberg then left the room, and there was a terrific explosion. The count, looking throgh a door which had been blown open, saw Hitler covered with blood and lying on the floor, and took it for granted that the Fuehrer was dead.)

Nevertheless, part of Beck's plan was put into effect. Orders to the army and proclamations were issued by the revolutionaries, but were countermanded by generals loyal to Hitler. Confusion reigned for two days, although Hitler himself had spoken over the radio.

Terror Reign Begun

The revolt ended officially August 8, "when amidst the blare of Goebbels' propaganda those leaders who had not yet been shot or tortured to death were brought before the People's Court and tried for high treason," the report said.

"The verdict and sentence were previously ordered by Hitler, and Goerdeler, Witzleben, Hoepner, Von Schulenberg and Von Moltke were either hanged or shot—Von Moltke in spite of the fact that alone among the revolutionaries he had refused to countenance the death of Hitler because of his religious scruples against the taking of life.

"For the rest, Beck, Von Stauffenberg and Olbricht were shot by Fromm, who was himself later courtmartialed and shot by the Nazis. Admiral Canaris, after suffering some months at the hands of the Gestapo, was either murdered or committed suicide, while the many other members of the movement were gradually hunted down and eliminated by Himmler.

"Terror raged for the next six months, and guilty and innocent alike were tortured and massacred in this, the last and worst outburst of the Nazis against their own people."

Girl Auto Victim Remains Critical

Miss Marjorie Ann Whiting, 14, remained in a critical condition last night at Physicians Hospital in Warrenton. She was injured when the car in which she was riding collided with an oil truck near Warrenton.

Her mother, Mrs. Marjorie Willis Whiting, 40, and her brother, Merle Judson Whiting, 17, both of Ferndale, Mich., died Friday. Miss Whiting sustained "severe head wounds and a concussion."

The driver of the truck, Toxie H. Lee, of Gainesville, Va., was charged with manslaughter and held under $1000 bond. Lee said the accident occurred when he swerved to avoid a car parked on a curve, and crashed head-on into the Whiting vehicle, according to State Trooper L. E. Wetsel.

Federal Pension Bills Facing Crucial Week

This is the crucial week for those retirement bills which so many people are hoping and praying Congress will approve. The Federal worker interest centers in the Langer - Chavez and the Stevenson bills to overhaul the Civil Service retirement system.

Kluttz

Since the bills are slated for debate this week in both the House and the Senate, and since each Federal worker would be affected in one way or another by them, this is analysis on how they differ:

The Stevenson bill doesn't change the present retirement ages, which are: Retirement at 60 after 30 years of service; at 62 after 15 years, and on a reduced annuity at 55 after 30 years.

In contrast, the Langer bill would permit retirement on a reduced annuity at 55 after 10 years, and also at 60 after 10 years.

The Stevenson bill provides benefits for widows of those who die on the job. It doesn't limit what the widow could draw. The amount would depend on the retirement credit of her husband.

The Langer bill would give benefits to both widows and children under 18 up to a maximum of $900 a year. The plan proposed is similar to that of Social Security for private employes.

Under the Stevenson bill, an employed wife could designate her husband to receive a survivorship pension. This couldn't be done under the Langer bill.

The Langer bill provides that anyone who retires in the future would have his choice of these two options: (1) to receive the full annuity provided by law, or (2) to take a reduced pension and designate a member of his immediate family to receive an amount equal to one half of his pension on his death.

The Stevenson bill also would give the employe who retires under it three options which are: (1) to take his full annuity; (2) to take a 10 per cent reduction and to allow his widow to receive one half of his pension to start at age 60, and (3) to designate some other family member for a survivor pension. But in such cases, the retiring employe would be compelled to pass a new physical test, and the amount of the annuity would be based on the age of the beneficiary.

Separation benefits are a matter of great interest in these days of large-scale layoffs. And here again the two bills have different provisions.

For example, under the Langer bill an employe who resigns voluntarily with less than 10 years of service must take a refund, without interest, from the Civil Service retirement system. But an employe who is involuntarily separated with less than five years of service would be required to draw out his money, but he'd be paid 4 per cent interest.

However, an employe who is laid off with more than 5 and less than 10 years of service would be offered this alternative: (1) To leave the money in the system and take a pension at age 62, or (2) withdraw the money, plus interest, and retain the right to draw a reduced anuity at 62.

And finally, an employe who quits voluntarily after more than 10 years of service would have the option of (1) leaving his money in the fund and drawing an annuity at 65, or (2) withdrawing his money and taking a small pension at 65.

The Stevenson bill would not penalize employes who resign voluntarily; people who were fired or quit would be treated the same. Those who served less than five years would be compelled to withdraw their money plus interest. Those who left the service after between 5 and 10 years of service would be given this option: (1) a refund with interest, or (2) a reduced pension at 62. And those who left Government after more than 10 years would have title to a small pension at 62.

Incidentally, the between 5-and 10-year provision of the Stevenson bill is identical with the House-approved Jones bill. The Senate Civil Service Committee has okayed the measure and it will be called up this week on the consent calendar.

The Langer and Stevenson bills are identical in these respects; to increase pensions of retired people a flat $300 or $25 a month, whichever is smaller; to increase annuities of people who will retire under it from 5 to 25 per cent over existing rates; to abolish the troublesome dollar-a-month "tontine" charge now and forever, and to raise the employe contribution from 5 to 6 per cent.

Why there has been such a congressional fuss over these bills is difficult to understand. The employe would pay practically the entire cost of the new benefits, and the retirement system would be made much simpler. In fact, some retirement experts believe the employes should get a much better deal. "Neither bill is a bargain for the employes," a retirement authority said yesterday.

Anyway, the time is near for a decision on the bills. Senator Langer (R., N. Dak.) promises Senate action tomorrow on his bill, and Representative Stevenson (R., Wis.) predicts his bill will be approved by the House by late Tuesday.

Waitresses Testify for 2 Policemen

Five defense witnesses, including two waitresses, testified at yesterday's Police Trial Board on charges against Police Pvts. James A. Stewart, jr., and Warren L. Garrett.

The two women, Mrs. Margaret A. Poore and Mrs. Clara I. Allen, both of 1008 24th st. nw., said Daniel J. Fitzpatrick, 22-year-old Georgetown University student, had alcohol on his breath and used profane language to them at about 2 or 2:30 a. m. on June 4.

Fitzpatrick, whose complaints that Stewart struck him with a blackjack, under no provocation, at about 5:30 that morning resulted in the charges against the two policemen, denied ever seeing the two women before yesterday, and said he had not been in the restaurant where they asserted he had done the "cursing."

Hearing Recessed

After his testimony, which was in addition to his appearance at the hearing on Friday, the hearing was recessed until 8:30 a. m. Thursday, when the board hopes to complete the testimony.

The Trial Board, composed of Inspector Clement P. Cox, police property clerk, chairman; Capt. Walter T. Storm of No. 12 Precinct and Assistant Corporation Counsel Oliver Gasch, is hearing charges of conduct unbecoming an officer, neglect of duty, and willfully and knowingly making an untruthful statement to a superior officer against each of the two Seventh Precinct officers. Both pleaded not guilty.

Testimony of three policemen from the Seventh Precinct yesterday tended to cast doubts on the two accused officers' quoted statements that they had gone directly home from the precinct station after they got off duty about 12:05 o'clock on the morning when the Fitzpatrick incident occurred.

Stewart Quoted

Police Inspector Lloyd E. Kelly and Lieut. Paul F. Barnes had quoted Stewart as saying he had walked to his car with Garrett and that Garrett had either walked home from there or had been driven home by Stewart. The latter said in a sworn statement, according to Inspector Kelly, that he had driven home without stopping en route, after Garrett left him. Garrett was quoted by Lieutenant Barnes as saying he had arrived home "not later than 12:15 a. m.," staying there until Stewart stopped for him about 5 a. m. to take him fishing.

Pvts. Richard G. Clagett and Frank Strader, jr., told the Trial Board they had seen Stewart at Wisconsin and M sts. nw. at about 12:30 a. m. as they were cruising in the police radio car. Corpl. Gordon T. Nance declared he saw Stewart and Garrett as well on 35th st., north of Volta pl. nw., in a parked car, between 12:30 and 1 a. m.

William Brassel, 1009 I st. ne., a Capital Transit streetcar operator, testified he saw Stewart strike Fitzpatrick on the side of the face at about 5:30 a. m., when Brassel stopped his streetcar a few feet before the stop at Wisconsin and N sts. nw. He had to stop there, he said, as the way was blocked by an automobile which Stewart moved to the curb after the incident described. He declared Fitzpatrick had just been "standing there" when struck. He could not see anything in Stewart's hand, he said.

William Taylor, 75 New York ave. ne., attendant at the gasoline station in the 3300 block of M st. nw., said he was on duty that morning and saw Stewart and Garrett, whom he knew by sight, in the nearby Little Tavern between 5 and 6 a. m. He had a perfect view into the place, he said, and did not see any whisky bottle on either of the officers in the restaurant or outside.

John H. Moore, 23, East Falls Church, Va., counterman at the Little Tavern, had testified Friday that Stewart had drunk whisky from a bottle in the restaurant.

Tuck to Entertain Newsmen Aug. 1 at Dinner, Reception

Richmond, Va., July 19 (AP).—Governor Tuck was invited prominent members of the newspaper industry to be his guests at a dinner and reception at Williamsburg Inn on August 1 when "Freedom of the Press Night" will be observed at the Lake Matoaka amphitheater, near Williamsburg, scene of "The Common Glory" presentation.

The Governor will entertain newspapermen of Virginia and other southeastern and eastern States at 6 p. m. Later, he and his guests will witness the Paul Green symphony-drama, depicting colonial life in the Virginia colony.

In addition, representatives of all Virginia newspapers will be present for the drama production.

The Senate last night confirmed Ernest Gross of New York to be legal adviser of the State Department, succeeding Charles Fahy.

Medieval Chivalry Flourishes as Knights Joust For Right to Crown Queen of Love and Beauty

MARY LOU BARTRAM, MAID OF BARTRAM MANOR, SPEARS A RING

Traditions of medieval chivalry flourished again in Maryland yestetrday when 20 knights gamboled and galloped, vying with lances for the honor of crowning a Queen of Love and Beauty.

Knighthood was definitely in flower when the Iron Bridge Hunt held its first postwar tournament on the Farmers Community Club grounds, about 3 miles west of Laurel on Silver Spring-Laurel rd.

Joseph Brady of Owings Mills, Md., billed as "the Knight of Soldier's Delight," proved that what Richard the Lion Hearted was to the sword he was to spearing the dangling rings.

He not only won the tournament but rode off with the Aitcheson challenge trophy, a silver cup.

His sovereign choice as Queen of Love and Beauty was Catherine Hoffmeister of Laurel, who was crowned at a dance in the evening.

Douglas Parran of Solomons and J. Leither Aitcheson of Laurel were second and third, respectively, in the competition to spear the rings, the smallest a half inch in diameter, suspended from three scaffolds 25 yards apart.

Steady hands and eyes, and sure-footed horses aided their spearing of the rings with 12-pound, needle-pointed lances.

The joust opened at 3 p. m. with a charge to the knights by Earnest Neal Cory, assistant State attorney general. A brief thunderstorm sent the valiant knights to cover, but only for a few minutes.

Then with a fanfare of music the Knight of the Limberlost, the Knight of Holy Family and others whose names are not recorded by the College of Heralds heard in their turn the shout:

"Knight of Will-If-I-Can, prepare to charge!"

They did. When a knight or Fiar Lady—of which there were three—successfully appeared three rings they heard the sweet blare of musicians and passed under an arch of knightly lances to the judges' box.

Thus was continued the custom that it is writ, made its first appearance in Maryland on the William Gilmore estate near Baltimore in 1840. The bards also record a joust a Laurel in 1866, won by Walliam T. James, "Knight of Muirkirk."

Many of the jousters in yesterday's event are members of the family and have been riding in tournaments for years. One of them, J. Leiter Atkinson of Burtonsville, began in 1910. He competed yesterday with his niece, Margaret, 21; his daughter, Jane, 16, and his brother, Will, 65, the oldest knight to take the field.

Association Lawyer to Aid Fire Captain

Suspended Fire Capt. W. V. James will confer with a Firemen's Association attorney tomorrow before attending a formal inquiry into the Thursday blast which injured four firemen at his No. 18 Engine Company.

The board of inquiry, appointed Friday by Fire Chief Clement Murphy, will probe the explosion to see if the captain should be cleared or brought before the Fire Department Trial Board.

Capt. Joseph W. Conroy, president of Firemen's Association Local 36, International Association of Firefighters (AFL), said Attorney William J. Rowan would confer with Captain James "the first thing Monday."

Any legal expenses will be handled by the association, Conroy promised.

Reports that friends of Captain James considered his suspension an act of "retaliation" for a recent ouster move against Chief Murphy, Conroy declared, were "inferences" drawn from his statements regarding the legal expenses.

A preliminary investigation showed the explosion occurred when fumes from an oil and gasoline mixture, with which firemen were cleaning a boiler, were ignited by a nearby coal stove.

Chief Murphy said Captain James had showed a lack of judgment and regard for the safety of his men.

Memorial Rites Held For Manassas Battle

Manassas, Va., July 19 (Spl.)—Ceremonies commemorating the eighty-sixth anniversary of the First Battle of Manassas were held today on the Henry House Hill at the Manassas National Battlefield Park.

The event was sponsored by the United Daughters of the Confederacy and the Sons of Confederate Veterans. A picnic lunch followed the formal program. Anniversary of the battle is on Monday.

Care Centers To Admit 220 More Children

Six public day care centers will admit 220 more children beginning tomorrow, Assistant Welfare Director Raymond Clapp announced yesterday.

He said broader use of the facilities is possible because the Senate, in passing the 1948 District appropriation bill Friday, threw out a House rider to limit day care to children whose parents earn less than $2000 a year.

The six centers are operating under the Second Deficiency Appropriations Act, he said, which makes them subject to provisions of the House bill—or Senate amendments to it—until the bill becomes law.

Clapp said only 50 children had been eligible to use the centers while the House rider was in effect. Pending final passage of the bill, a capacity number of 270 children can be handled with availble deficiency funds, he revealed.

Four hundred children were enrolled at the 12 centers operated by the Welfare Department last year. The centers were closed June 30 because they ran out of money. Deficiency funds enabled the six to reopen July 15.

4 More Counties To Set Up Clinics

Baltimore, July 19 (AP).—Four more Maryland counties will follow the lead of Anne Arundel and Montgomery Counties by setting up rheumatic fever clinics this fall, Dr. Charles H. Halliday, director of the division of communicable disease, said today.

Anne Arundel was first to establish a clinic, and Montgomery County opened one this spring. Washington, Allegany, Charles and Wicomico Counties have applied to join the program, Dr. Halliday said.

The clinics operate with Federal funds supplied by the national children's bureau. Personnel provided by the counties work in cooperation with the Harriet Lane clinic at Johns Hopkins Hospital.

Planners Seek to Cut Garrett Hospital Cost

Oakland, Md., July 19 (AP).—Faced with construction bids deemed too high, sponsors of the Garrett County Memorial Hospital backed up today to see if they could cut some corners.

They went into a huddle with Architect James J. Baldwin of Washington and Herbert G. Fritz of the State Hospital Planning Commission to see if some features of the plans could be eliminated.

Bids on the new building ranged from $447,198 to $518,083.

Low bidder on the project was Moyer Brothers of Altoona, Pa., who recently received the contract for a new armory at Cumberland, Md.

Police Auto Purchase Challenged

The potentially hot issue of contract awards to businesses owned by county officials flared up briefly yesterday during a meeting of the Arlington County Board.

When the group was asked to approve or reject a payment of $3820 to Bauserman's Service Station for three new police scout cars, independent board member Daniel A. Dugan challenged the money bill.

He said it was his understanding that the station, located at Columbia Pike and Glebe rd., Arlington, was owned by Arlington Sheriff Homer G. Bauserman.

Smith Attacks "Favoritism"

Earlier this week, county board candidate T. Oscar Smith also had attacked "favoritism to businesses which have an entree to the clique," and cited a section of the Virginia Code prohibiting the practice.

Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence Douglas told the board that shortly before or immediately after Bauserman took office, he wrote the county treasurer that he no longer had an interest in the station, merely owning the building.

Douglas said there was "no question" but that the purchase should be made from Bauserman's Service Station. Shortly afterward, the board voted approval of the bill.

The board also tentatively allocated $17,000 to finance condemnation of land along site of the proposed George Washington Memorial Parkway in Arlington.

Half the sum, or $8500, is expected to be returned to the county by the State of Virginia when the Legislature convenes next January. Douglas, however, recommended final approval of the $17,000 payment be held up pending search for a specific statute authorizing the county to make the move.

In its meeting yesterday, the board also:

1. Reappointed Mrs. Dora Ihle and Leslie Hall to the Arlington Welfare Board.
2. Scheduled a meeting for 8 p. m. July 29 to review the arrangement under which Arlington mains are used to pass District water to Falls Church and Fairfax County.
3. Awarded a contract for $32,710 to the Arlington Asphalt Co. for three sidewalks, curb, and gutter construction projects.

George Litton Named VPI Husbandry Head

Blacksburg, Va., July 19 (AP).—George W. Litton has been appointed acting head of the animal husbandry department at Virginia Tech, replacing R. E. Hunt, now on leave of absence to Syria, it was announced today.

Litton is a VPI graduate and a former county agent for the Virginia Agricultural Extension Service. A sheep specialist, he joined the animal husbandry staff here in 1940.

'Over Income' Families Face Evictions

The Alexandria Housing Authority has begun a systematic program of removing "overincome" families from its three low-rental housing projects, it was revealed yesterday.

These families include groups who are now earning more than the maximum income allowed at the time the projects were set up as slum-clearance and low-cost housing development, but who were allowed to remain in the homes during the war because of the housing emergency.

Spokesmen for the authority said the eviction procedure is part of the authority's reconversion to a peacetime basis, and stressed the fact that only "overincome" families would be evicted. No occupants, the authority said, will be given less than six months advance notice to vacate.

10 Families Ordered Out

So far, 10 families have been notified they will have to find other homes by January 1, unless there is some change in their income which would make them eligible for continued occupancy. Occupants to receive the first eviction notices included five families in the authority's white homes and five in Negro developments.

The authority said it had learned that some houses were occupied by as many as four employed persons earning annual wages totaling more than $5000, a figure "well above" the maximum income requirements provided under the Housing Act. An initial survey showed 88 of the 406 units were occupied by "over income" families, although this figure has been reduced by a reexamination of income reports and "changes in status," the authority said.

Under the eviction procedure just inaugurated, 10 ineligible families will receive notices to vacate each month until all "over income" groups have been removed.

Limitations Increased

Meanwhile, the authority revealed it had raised the maximum income limitations before inaugurating its eviction procedure because of a general increase in living costs. Homes which formerly could not be occupied by families earning more than $1950 a year will be rented to occupants whose income does not exceed $2190, and proportionate increases have been granted "all along the line."

The income limitations vary according to the size of the homes and the developments in which they are located. The "top ceiling" is allowed in the John Roberts Homes on N. West st., where a four-bedroom home can be occupied by a family earning as much as $2772 annually.

The other low-cost projects supervised by the authority, both occupied by Negro families, are the George Parker Homes on Oronoco st., and the Samuel Madden Homes on Montgomery st. Top scales in these developments are $2300 and $2445, respectively.

NCHA Acts to Help 'Over Income' Tenants

"House for Rent" notices were posted on community bulletin boards yesterday in numerous National Capital Housing Authority projects as NCHA went all out to aid "over-income" tenants to find private housing.

John Ihlder, NCHA executive officer, said any real estate firm would be welcome to call attention to rental offerings by posting notices on NCHA bulletin boards.

NCHA has served eviction notices on all tenants of its low-rent dwellings who have annual family incomes of $3000 or more. Lower income families will take their places.

Ihlder has appealed to local building and real estate groups to aid in finding homes for the over-income families.

Henn Quadruplets Will Get Monthly Stipend of $100

Baltimore, July 19 (AP).—Taking cognizance of the high cost of food, a court ruled today the Henn quadruplets on August 15 may start drawing $100 a month of the fund set up for them by a St. Louis condensed milk company.

Charles Henn, jr., former Army sergeant, and his British war bride, the former Dorothy Geast of London, pleaded they could not maintain the family on his $247 monthly salary as a book binder.

The quads will be 7 months old next Tuesday. They have been at St. Agnes Hospital since birth, but next month the Henns hope to move them into a new home built at suburban Catonsville. Popular subscriptions, free hospital services and other gifts have maintained them at the hospital and paid part of the cost of the new home.

Virginian Is Convicted Of Slaying in Colorado

Trinidad, Colo., July 19 (AP).—Hugh Carter of Round Hill, Va., was convicted today of slaying Howard Resch, Trinidad musician, outside a night club here November 17. The jury, which received the case yesterday afternoon, recommended life imprisonment. The defense pleaded insanity.

The shooting occurred after Roy Dolce, night club proprietor, refused to serve additional drinks to Carter, according to testimony submitted at the trial.

Halsey, Vandegrift To Address Legion

Richmond, Va., July 19 (AP).—Fleet Admiral William F. Halsey, jr., U. S. Navy, retired, will be among the speakers at the twenty-ninth annual convention of the American Legion, Department of Virginia, here August 10-13, Legion officials announced today.

Also to address the Legionnaires will be Gen. A. A. Vandegrift, commandant, U. S Marine Corps, a native Virginian and victor over the Japanese on Guadalcanal. He will speak at the morning session on August 11.

Accident Report

Year-Old Boy Loses Eye in Play Mishap

For the second consecutive week a child lost an eye while playing at home. This week a year-old boy accidentally struck his eye while playing in his front yard, necessitating removal at Episcopal Hospital.

According to the District Red Cross Accident Prevention Service weekly report, a young girl lost an eye last week when a firecracker exploded.

A 48-year-old-man who injured an eye several days ago with a shovel may eventually lose it.

An unusual accident resulted from lightning striking a radio aerial, frightening a year-old girl who was standing nearby. She fell against the radio, suffering cuts and bruises.

Three children were bitten by dogs during the week, and one 4-year-old boy was bitten by a rat and developed rat-bite fever.

As reported by the Red Cross, 129 home accident cases were treated at local hospitals last week, 38 of which were caused by falls, 29 from cuts, 10 from burns, 10 by foreign objects in ear, eye, nose, throat or stomach. Eight contusions, four accidental poisonings, one electric shock, and 29 were miscellaneous.

Editor Heads Trade Board Committee

Appointment of Lawrence F. Hurley, editor of Nation's Business, as chairman of the Washington Board of Trade committee on national affairs was announced yesterday by Board President John A. Reilly.

At the same time, Reilly stated that Charles C. Koones, past president of the Washington Real Estate Board, has been reappointed chairman of the committee on public and private buildings.

Hurley is a member of Kappa Sigma fraternity, Harvard Club of New York and the Metropolitan and Columbia Country Clubs in Washington. He and Mrs. Hurley live at 4944 Lowell st. nw.

The national affairs committee is a new part of the Board of Trade program, Reilly explained. It will review national affairs such as price control, and Federal housing laws which have an immediate economic or social effect on Washington.

Koones is a native Washingtonian. He is president of the Charles C. Koones Real Estate Co. and lives at 5302 Edgemoor le., Bethesda.

His committee recommends board action on construction industry matters, and on the availability of commercial and residential properties. It now will give special attention to slum clearance projects, the Federal Government's construction program for the Washington area, and public housing proposals.

Price Average Up Slightly on Md. Tobacco Floors

Baltimore, July 19 (AP).—Average prices for most grades of tobacco sold on southern Maryland auction floors above prices paid the previous week, the Department of Agriculture reported today.

Largest gains were reflected in prices received for fair tips and fair dark red seconds.

The net volume of sales during the five selling days ended yesterday was the largest for any week of the season, amounting to 2,396,000 pounds.

An average price of $47.67 per 100 pounds netted during the week compared with an overall season average of $46.35. Total season's sales, including those on the Baltimore hogshead market, reached about 24,329,000 pounds.

Various trade groups met during the week and decided tentatively to close the season's sales on August 22.

Plane Victim's Parents in Md.

South Dartmouth, Mass., July 19 (INS).—The actor victim of a plane crash Friday was definitely identified today as Richard Brooks, 26, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Cleland Brooks of Cambridge, Md.

He died when a plane piloted by Charles P. Golding, New Bedford public utilities executive, crashed into the ocean near South Dartmouth.

At the time of the accident, Brooks first was identified as the son of John Clubley, veteran actor and a member of the stock company at the Fairhaven summer theater where Brooks worked. The father of the victim said in a telephone conversation that Clubley was a "second father' 'to the young actor.

Virginia Tech Cow Sets Production Record

Blacksburg, Va., July 19 (AP).—A Virginia Tech dairy herd Holstein-Friesian cow recently completed a remarkable 302-day production record of 616 pounds of butterfat and 15,852 pounds of milk in herd improvement registry test, the Holstein-Friesian Association Association of America, announced.

The cow, V. P. I. Ormsby Laverne Dainty 2219541, was milked twice daily and was four years, 11 months old when she began her test period.

To Install Parking Meters

Moorefield, W. Va., July 19.—Ninety parking meters will be installed on Main st., from the northern to the southern end of the town, within the next 60 days, Mayor P. W. Clarke announced.

Janitor Dies In Home Fire; Wife Escapes

A 48-year-old District school janitor was burned to death shortly after 3 p. m. yesterday when fire of undetermined origin swept the kitchen of his two-story home.

The victim was Cornielius Berry of 2321 Sherman ave. nw.

His wife, Mrs. Mamie Berry, only other person in the house, escaped through a second floor window across a porch to the home of a neighbor. She was unharmed.

She told police she was upstairs ironing when she heard shouts of "fire" and smelled smoke. Rushing to the door, smoke poured in as she opened it, so she closed it again and fled through the window to the home of Mrs. Minnie Brewer, 2325 Sherman ave. nw.

The fire was discovered by another neighbor, Mrs. Helen Thomason, 2319 Sherman ave., who gave the alarm.

Neighbors said Berry was mowing and seeding his front lawn when he heard shouts of "fire" and rushed into the house to fight the flames.

Policy said Berry, whose burned body was found on the back porch, suffered from a heart condition. It was believed a heart attack may have prevented his escape.

The body was taken to the District Morgue for an autopsy.

The kitchen and the glassed-in back porch were gutted and a nearby garage was scorched. Total damage was estimated at $2000.

Driver Thinks Fast In Gasoline Blaze

Fast thinking of a 28-year-old truck driver yesterday forestalled a fire which threatened to envelop his truck, a gasoline tank and a service station.

The driver, Irvin Smith, of 642 I st. se., received the Bronze Star Medal for clearing a mined and booby - trapped bridge while serving with the Army in Europe.

Smith

The freak accident occurred at a filling station at 4866 Massachusetts ave. nw., managed by M. J. Concannon, 33, 1502 Hillwood dr., Takoma Park.

Smith, who drives for the O'Boyle Petroleum Transportation Co., had just finished filling a tank when a cigarette lighter fell from the pocket of a station attendant, Murrell Miller, 21, of 3744 W st. nw., and sparked.

The spark ignited drainage from the truck hose and gas fumes in the air, and spread to the truck brakes and base outlet of the hose.

Smith jumped into the truck and drove it into the middle of Massachusetts ave. before the brakes could lock, and beat out the flames.

He then rushed back to the station and helped Concannon and Miller, who were using a chemical extinguisher, fight the flames. To prevent an explosion they opened the lid of the newly filled tank, in which an estimated 600 gallons of gasoline burned.

Three fire engines, a truck and rescue squad answered the alarm.

The one-story brick structure was scorched, but the truck suffered only minor damage.

Fire also caused some damage to an auto repair shop, operated by Ed Glenn of 101 Massachusetts ave. nw., at the rear of 1231 F st. ne., shortly after 1 a. m. yesterday.

In answering the call with No. 18 fire company, Lieut. Warren W. Smith lost his peaked white helmet incribed "Lieutenant." Smith, 46, a veteran of 23 years Fire Department service, said his only other helmet was inscribed "Sergeant," so he hopes for return of this one to avoid taking a "demotion."

Retail Sales Tax Opposed by GOP Women of Md.

Easton, Md., July 19 (AP).—The Federation of Republican Women of Maryland today went on record as opposing the State retail sales tax levied July 1.

The organization opened its annual convention this morning with heavy rains limiting the attendance to approximately 50 delegates.

After an opening address by Mrs. W. David Tilghman, president, the convention heard Col. E. T. Miller, Republican Maryland Representative from the First Congressional District, principal speaker of the day.

Miller praised the organization for its active interest in political problems and stressed the advantage of the two-party system used in the United States.

The Congressman criticized the Truman Administration for what he described as lavish spending, and said it was up to the GOP to return the country "to normal."

Sheldon Named G.W.U. Associate Physician

Dr. Luther Sheldon, jr., Rear Admiral, USN ret., has been appointed associate physician at George Washington University, it was announced yesterday by Dr. Daniel L. Borden, director of health administration for the university. From 1944 to 1946 Dr. Sheldon was District medical officer for the Fifth Naval District.

The university will gain additional infirmary facilities at the beginning of the fall term, Dr. Borden said, when Dr. Sheldon and Dr. Elizabeth Kahler, who has been an associate university physician for several years, will move to new quarters at 2108 G st. nw.

Women Pilots Ready For 'Breakfast Flight'

About a hundred women pilots, including many from the Washington area, will participate in the second annual "breakfast flight" of the Wasps and 99s at the Annapolis, Md., airport this morning.

Feminine members of the FBI Flying Club, Revenue Aero Club, Aero Club of Washington and the Washington Air Derby Association have been invited by the hosts, Miss Dorothy Williams of Annapolis and the Annapolis Flying Service.

Poison Victims Recover

Annapolis, Md., July 19 (AP).—Four West Virginians were recovering today from an attack of food poisoning that one of them said was caused by insect spray in their tent at nearby Beverley Beach.

The victims were George W. Frederick, 40; his son, George I. 14; Edgar L. Starry, 64, and Roy W. Stride, 38, all of Shepherdstown, W. Va.

Neighbors brought them to Emergency Hospital, here yesterday from the resort, where they had been building a cottage. A hospital attache quoted Stride as saying young Frederick sprayed the tent and apparently the solution got on some potatoes they later ate.

Peach Crop Cut in Half

Winchester, Va., July 19 (AP).—The Frederick County peach crop will be about 50 per cent of normal, growers reported today.

The size and quality of the fruit will be good, they said.

Harvesting of the Golden Jubilee variety is to begin Monday, to be followed by Belle of Georgia and Hale Haven, with Elbertas—the largest variety grown locally—to be picked about the middle of August. Growers have been getting around $2 per bushel for early Red Bird peaches, but higher prices are indicated for those to be harvested from now on, packers said.

Club Meetings Set

Manassas, Va., July 19.—County club meetings for the coming week have been planned by Miss Leona Kline, county home agent, according to the following schedule: Monday, the Bethel 4-H Boys and Girls Club will meet with Frances Ann Garner at 2:30 p. m.; Tuesday, the Haymarket 4-H Club will take a trip to Washington; Tuesday afternoon, the Buckhall 4-H Club will meet at 2:30 p. m. with Mrs. Joe Kemper; Wednesday, the Aden Home Demonstration Club will have a meeting at 1:30 p. m. at the United Brethren Church to study the purchase of bedding; Thursday, the Greenwich Home Demonstration Club will meet at the home of Mrs. Berkeley Hoffman at 1:30 p. m.

Man Burns to Death

Waynesboro, Va., July 19 (AP).—John E. Woody, 65, of nearby Greenfield, was burned to death about 3 a. m. today when his 10-room home was destroyed by fire. Cause of the fire was not determined immediately.

Woody's granddaughter and two small children were safely out of the building and he apparently returned for possessions and became trapped. His wife is visiting relatives in West Virginia.

Girls' 'State' Opens

Radford, Va., July 19 (AP).—One hundred and fifteen high school girls will come to Radford College here tomorrow for the opening of the first Virginia Girls' State, patterned after boys' State experiments in learning government by actual practice.

The Girls' State is sponsored by the Virginia American Legion auxiliary and is being held concurrently with the fifth Old Dominion Boys' State at Virginia Tech at nearby Blacksburg.

Camp Work Speeded

Charlottesville, Va., July 19.—Work on the camp being constructed in Amherst County to serve the more than 4000 youth in the 112 churches of the Charlottesville District, Methodist Church, has proceeded rapidly during the last month, the Rev. Bernard S. Via, district superintendent, said today.

An earth dam, approximately 500 yards long, has been completed and the water from a mountain stream has been turned in. The camp site is five miles east of Amherst, off from Route 60, and offers an almost perfect setting.

Cattle Raisers Organize

Charlottesville, Va., July 19.—A committee of Albemarle dairy cattle producers has agreed to set up an Albemarle Breeders Association, with laboratory and office in Charlottesville.

The association will provide a means by which producers may organize cooperatively to secure good sires and by artificial insemination to improve the county's dairy cattle breeds. The committee is headed by C. Mercer Garnett, jr.

$2658 Payroll Taken

Baltimore, July 19 (AP).—Today was payday for the 20 workers at the Monumental Iron and Metal Co., but the safe was bare—thieves had cracked it with the company's own tools and stolen $2658.

It was the fourth safe-cracking for the firm, but the first one that paid off, said Treasurer John Bannon, jr. The safe was opened with a drill, a 12-pound maul and a crowbar.

Loses Fish and $101

Edgemere, Md., July 19 (AP).—Not only did the big fish Walter E. Strong caught get away from him—they cost him $101.45.

Strong, a resident of Havre de Grace, forfeited collateral in that amount last night when he failed to appear in Edgemere Police Court on a charge of having caught and kept oversize fish.

Tidewater Fisheries Department inspectors took 1285 pounds of striped bass, or rock, when he appeared with his catch at the wholesale fish market.

The inspectors said some weighed more than 15 pounds—the weight limit under the law.

The catch was distributed among local hospitals and St. Mary's Industrial School.

Raid Fines Net $2510

Princess Anne Court House, Va., July 19 (AP).—The Commonwealth and Princess Anne County were $2510 wealthier today.

The $2510 came in yesterday from total fines assessed 13 persons, including one woman, who were convicted of various charges resulting from raids by ABC agents and State police at Virginia Beach and other nearby resorts.

4-H Boys to Camp

Manassas, Va., July 19.—Byron C. Woodside and Charles Franklin Miller, Haymarket 4-H Club members, will attend the Boys' State Forestry Camp at Holiday Lake near Appomattox, Va., from July 28 to August 2.

Potato Harvest Near End

Norfolk, Va., July 19 (AP).—With approximately 2500 carloads of potatoes harvested from Norfolk area farms, local growers have about completed the 1947 potato season.

Unlike last year when the Government purchased approximately 75 per cent of locally grown potatoes to maintain a commercial market, few U. S, No. 1 grade potatoes were sold under support programs, with the commercial market paying from $3 to $3.50 per hundredweight.

Stockholders Get Sum

Fredericksburg, Va., July 19.—Stockholders in the defunct Farmers & Merchants State Bank here, liquidation of which began early in 1945, will receive $102,000 in cash from the assets of the bank, C. O'Conor Goolrick, attorney for a majority of the stockholders and the liquidating trustee of the bank, has disclosed.

About 60 stockholders will receive shares of the $102,000, paid this week to Goolrick by James W. Stephens, who represented the FDIC in liquidation proceedings.

Safety Group Formed

Winchester, Va., July 19.—The Winchester-Frederick County Safety Council has been organized here with the election of a board of directors and decision to employ a full-time manager.

Election Scheduled

Purcellville, Va., July 19.—New advisory units will be elected by the local Southern States at their annual membership meeting at Purcellville School at 8 p. m. Wednesday, July 23. Jennings F. Potts of Purcellville, chairman of the advisory board, will open the meeting.

The nominees for the advisory board are Frank McComb, Bluemont; Charles Benedum, Round Hill; Thomas Taylor, Hamilton, and Ernest Graham, Lovettsville. Those for the farm home committee are Mrs. Jennings Potts, Purcellville; Mrs. Sam Brown, Hamilton; Mrs. Stanley Presgraves, Harpers Ferry, and Mrs. Fred Bast, Round Hill.

M. M. Johns of Culpeper, Southern States Cooperative district manager for this area, will present the annual report.

Heads Annapolis Alumni

Annapolis, Md., July 19 (AP).—D. S. Walker of New York City is the new president of the Naval Academy Alumni Association.

Walker, a member of the class of 1924, was elected yesterday at a meeting of the association's board of trustees. He is vice president of the Combustion Engineering Co.

Other new officers:

S. D. Foster, Arnold, Md.; A. Arnold Brand, jr, Chicago; F. W. Pierce, Los Angeles, vice presidents, and Rear Admiral C. E. Coney, retired, executive secretary and treasurer.

Budget to Be Topic

Richmond, Va., July 19 (AP).—The State Commission on Post-Mortem Examinations will consider its budget for the 1948-1949 biennium at a meeting tentatively set for August 8. Dr. Herbert S. Breyfogle, chief medical examiner, also announced that September 15 had been set as deadline for presentation of the commission's estimates to the Division of the Budget.

Beekeepers to Meet

Lynchburg, Va., July 19 (AP).—Approximately 100 beekeepers from all over the State will convene in Lynchburg Wednesday for the annual summer meeting and picnic of the Virginia State Beekeepers Association, G. W. Vest, branch manager of G. B. Lewis Co., beekeeping suppliers, said today.

To begin at 10:30 a. m. with an invocation by C. H. Watts, the day will be filled with talks on various phases of beekeeping.

Plan Will Provide For Referendum, Bailey Points Out

Provisions of the new charter for Montgomery County were explained yesterday at a picnic and supper held on the Pleasant Hills farm of Judge Thomas C. Kelley near Darnestown, Md.

Howard P. Bailey, secretary for the charter board, outlined what he called the principal safeguards of the proposed charter. The plan will be voted on in 1948.

Bailey pointed out that the proposed charter permits voters to substitute county commissioner government for the charter form if a trial of the charter convinces them they do not wish it.

He also explained the charter provides that a referendum can be forced by 10 per cent of the voters, requiring the council to submit any legislation it passes to a vote of the people.

Bailey also pointed out that the proposal puts final veto power on acts of the county council in the hands of the people, rather than in the hands of the Governor.

Those who attended the picnic went on a tour of historic sites in the area, participated in athletic events and saw children's movies.

EQUESTRIENNE—Cynthia Shearin, 5, of Kensington, Md., enjoys a ride on "Starlight," one of Judge Kelley's horses, under the supervision of Mrs. Jennings Bailey, jr., chairman of the Charter picnic, and Judge Charles H. Squire, of the Orphans' Court of Maryland for Montgomery County

Pastures Yield Poisons With Food for Stock

Blacksburg, Va., July 19 (AP).—Not everything that grows in the pasture is safe animal food, and A. B. Massey today passed along to farmers information on poisonous plants that are dangerous and often fatal to livestock.

Common in Virginia and especially dangerous this time of year are wild cherry, poison hemlock, and water hemlock, Massey said.

Wild cherry tree seeds, he explained, are carried by birds, and the trees may be found growing along fence rows where birds have roosted. Highly poisonous hydrocynanic acid is produced in freshly wilted leaves and twigs.

Massey warned against leaving growth broken off from cherry trees by storms or other means in places where it may be eaten by livestock.

Hemlock Is Described

Poison hemlock was described as a weedy type of plant that resembles the carrot, but in the summer of its second year may grow to a height of six feet and produce a cluster of flowers and fine cut leaves. Frequent in wet places and in the mountain section of the State, it was said by Massey to have a sickening, persistent odor.

It contains alkaloids that bring general weakening of the heart and early symptoms including loss of appetite and active secretion of saliva to animals that have eaten it, Massey said.

To prevent livestock access to poison hemlock, farmers were advised to destroy the plant wherever it is found, especially in pastures, to fence stock out of marshes, and to limit drinking places to sections of clear-running streams.

The closely related water hemlock, Massey continued, is found in wet soil, especially in marshy places along streams and in seepage areas. It was described as having an annual stem 3 to 6 feet high, large leaves dividing into numerous leaflets, and small flowers in umbrella-shaped groups.

Entire Plant Poisonous

The entire plant is poisonous when young, leaves and stem becoming less so with age, although roots and seed hold their poisonous effect to man, livestock and poultry, he said.

He recommended draining marshy areas in pastures or fencing stock from such places and restricting animals to small, clear areas of streams for watering.

Included in more than a score of other Virginia plants listed by Massey as poisonous were the spurges, many species of which contain an oil that may cause severe action in the intestinal tract. Among the most troublesome of the spurges is Caper's spurge or sassy jack, on which sheep are particularly likely to browse, and which is common in southwest Virginia, Massey stated.

The plant was said to be found more often in fence rows and in rough, stony land. Farmers were advised to pull or dig up all sassy jack plants, as additional roots will be formed if the plant is cut off.

Meanwhile the Agriculture Extension Service said many cases of bloat, which is fatal to a number of dairy cows each year, may be avoided by following a few simple feeding practices.

The usual cause of bloat was described as rapid eating of tender tops of legumes such as alfalfa or clover without getting a sufficient amount of fibrous stems.

Dairymen were advised to let cows graze on a new legume pasture for only a few minutes the first day, gradually increasing the grazing time.

The service warned against turning cows into a legume pasture wet with rain or dew and, particularly, against allowing hungry cows to graze on legumes.

Also recommended was feeding hay to cows before pasturing them on legumes and keeping hay in the feed racks in a legume pasture.

Model Plane Competition Slated Today

An estimated 1000 power-driven model airplanes, owned by more than 300 competitors, are expected to participate at 9 a. m. today in the second annual National Capital Model Air Meet at Hybla Valley Airport, three miles south of Alexandria.

The day-long exhibit, sponsored by the National Airport Club, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Washington Evening Star, will attract model plane enthusiasts from more than a dozen Eastern States, according to show officials. They will compete for a variety of prizes ranging from cost-free trips to the International Modern Air Meet at Detroit to merchandise donated by manufacturers of model plane equipment and accessories.

Contests for speed and endurance will be supplemented by a number of exhibitions, which are being arranged through the cooperation of Army Air Force officials, the CAA and other groups.

Next Sunday the Virginia airport will be the scene of an air circus to be staged as a benefit for the St. Mary's Boys Club of Alexandria. Nationally known stunt flyers, headed by Woody Edmondson, winner of seventh place in last year's Cleveland Air Races, will perform.

Former Denazifier Jailed in Gasoline Case

Munich, Germany, July 19 (U.P.). German police today jailed Alfred Loritz, a former denazification administrator in Bavaria, on charges of black marketeering in gasoline.

The arrest came after a witness at a black market trial testified that he had worked on gasoline deals with Loritz, who has a strong antinazi record.

2 More Radio Stations Get FM Permits

Two more frequency modulation radio stations were authorized this week by the Federal Communications Commission in the Greater Washington area.

Station WTOP, Washington outlet for the Columbia Broadcasting System, was granted a permit for an FM station in the District, Carl Burkland, station manager, said yesterday. He said station engineers will soon begin engineering experiments with mobile equipment to determine the location of the transmitter.

The authorization brings the number granted in the District to 12—the total set aside for Washington by FCC. Five FM stations are now on the air.

The other permit was granted to the newly organized Montgomery FM Broadcasting Corp. for a station in the Silver Spring area. Mrs. Anne Alpert of 401 V st. nw., president of the firm, said a $40,000 transmitter and studios will be erected on Kants Mill rd., Silver Spring.

Her son, Sidney Alpert, vice president, said the station plans to operate 19 hours a day—the most ambitious program of any exclusively FM station in the country, he said. High fidelity transcriptions, including many from Hollywood, are being planned, he said.

Saul G. Eichtenberg, Washington attorney with offices in the National Press Building, is secretary of the firm. Alpert said three veterans are on the board of directors and others will be added to the enterprise.

At present station WGAY has an AM and FM permit in the Silver Spring area and station WOOK has an AM authorization, Alpert said.

MORMONS MARK CENTURY OF RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

By Merlo Pusey
Post Reporter

WHEN the Mormon pioneers approached the end of their 1400-mile trek just a hundred years ago, their leader, Brigham Young, was ill with mountain fever. He had been stricken shortly after the toiling caravan crossed the Bear River and began the hardest part of the journey over the Wasatch Mountains. As it was impossible for him to travel, the main body went ahead under the direction of Orson Pratt, entering Salt Lake Valley on July 21 and 22, 1847.

But it was "Brother Brigham," as many of the Saints called him, who gave the event its special touch of drama. Emerging from what has ever since been Emigration Canyon, on the morning of July 24, he told the driver to turn his carriage so that he could survey the valley and the great lake shimmering in the distance. After gazing in silence for some moments he said: "It is enough. This is the right place; drive on."

A hundred years of history for the Latter-Day Saints (the correct designation of the Mormons) stem from this statement. Next Thursday, on July 24, they will dedicate a monument on the spot where those historic words were uttered. It is a symbol of religious freedom and a tribute to the hardy men and women who journeyed across half a continent of wilderness to establish communities where they could worship without molestation. Incidentally, the monument is the work of Mahonri Young, noted sculptor, who is a grandson of Brigham Young.

The dedication will be preceded by colorful parades through the streets of Salt Lake City on July 23 and 24, by music festivals, pageants, entertainments and a huge Boy Scout jamboree. A highlight will be the entrance into the valley of a company of Sons of the Utah Pioneers, traversing almost the exact route of the original company between Nauvoo, Ill., and Salt Lake.

The company is composed of direct descendants of the pioneers, dressed and even bewhiskered in imitation of their ancestors. But this time the trip will be made in eight days, rather than the year and a half required for the first trek, with stops to produce pageants at Nauvoo, Winter Quarters (now a suburb of Omaha, Nebr.), Fort Laramie and Fort Bridger.

A National Surge

WHAT makes the Mormons' story unique is not so much their journey itself as the conditions under which it was made. The pioneers who found a haven in Salt Lake Valley were part of a westward movement that had begun early in the 1840s. Fremont had written lucidly of the phenomenal scenery and the golden opportunities of the Far West, and increasing numbers of settlers and adventurers were moving in long caravans to Oregon and California.

The Mormons, however, were not lured by any love of the wilderness, spirit of adventure or hope of free land. They loved their city of Nauvoo, built in a charming spot on the Mississippi River and then the largest city in Illinois. Within only a few years they had industriously built homes, shops, places of business and churches. Their temple was nearing completion. Nothing short of violence could have forced them to leave, and the final decision was taken only after several years of mobbings, plundering and murder.

Persecution of the Mormons had been a commonplace since Joseph Smith first announced that he had received heavenly visitations during which he was instructed to organize a new church. His claim to have found, under direction of an angel, ancient records from which he translated the Book of Mormon, brought further sharp opposition. Hostility followed the Saints as they moved from New York to Kirtland, Ohio, and later to Jackson, Clay and Caldwell Counties in Missouri. Mobs and militia chased them out of Missouri in 1838-39, to the accompaniment of massacres and confiscation of property.

Illinois first welcomed them, but friction grew because of the novelty of the Mormons' religious beliefs and their tendency to live by themselves. In Nauvoo the movement grew so rapidly, with thousands of converts moving in from the British Isles, that the older settlers began to fear the Mormons would dominate the State. Mob action assumed serious proportions once more after rumors of plural marriages among some of the elders spread and the Mormons seized and suppressed a local newspaper, the Expositor, which was exploiting this issue.

Midwinter Flight

JOSEPH SMITH, to whom the Mormons looked as both leader and prophet, was murdered in the jail at Carthage, Ill., in 1844. Leadership had passed to Brigham Young under the most difficult circumstances. Divisions within the church were added to continued pressures from without. Before the martyrdom of Joseph Smith he had predicted that the Saints would be driven to the Rocky Mountains and there become "a mighty people." In the months following his death it became increasingly evident that Nauvoo would have to be abandoned. Yet the Saints were utterly unprepared to undertake a journey across half a continent of uninhabited prairies, deserts and mountains.

Young agreed with the Council of Twelve in August, 1845, that a company of 3000 able-bodied men should leave the following spring for the unknown West. But their enemies would not let them wait until spring. Mobs again fell upon outlying Mormon settlements, burning houses and harrying the Saints into Nauvoo. The pressure became so intense that leaders of the church began to move across the Mississippi in January as an indication of their good intentions.

With the exodus thus begun, thousands of people followed in panic. They poured across the river to the snowy Iowa shore without adequate equipment for the journey and even without provisions. Nine babies were born in tents during the first night when they camped at Sugar Creek, nine miles from Nauvoo, in temperature that fell to 20 below. Suffering from lack of shelter, food and clothing was intense. It was under these circumstances that their memorable trek began. Not a group of hardy frontiersmen, but a whole people was migrating.

Through the early part of 1846 Brigham Young nursed the hope of getting an advance company off to the Rockies in time to locate a favorable place for settlement before winter set in. But the slow journey of suffering people across Iowa made it evident that the plan could not be carried out. Energy was then concentrated on reaching the banks of the Missouri River and recouping strength for the longer journey the following year. Death was already taking a considerable toll, and Young refused to take the risk of leading his people to misery and failure; he clung tenaciously to the vision of a promised land.

Polk's Strategy

IT WAS during the painful mass movement across Iowa that a call to national service

House GOP Skirts Isolationism

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

THE Republican Congress, driving for adjournment this weekend, will leave behind it a passable foreign policy record.

Little known fact is, it escaped being isolationist by the flick of two cards.

The last near-miss occurred in the House only last week; the first, early in the session.

A blunder in either case would have shattered the bipartisan working arrangement and turned back the clock to the isolationist 'twenties.

When the House Appropriations Committee last week approved the full 400 million dollars appropriation for Greece and Turkey the change of heart was attributed to the "explosive" situation in the Balkans.

Actually, House GOP leaders called Republican members of the subcommittee on the carpet, in Secretary Marshall's presence, nearly a week before. When they went in they were all set to hack deep into foreign aid funds all along the line. When they came out they were under leadership orders to restore the slash.

Grave conditions in Greece provided the convenient background for the shift. The plain fact was, however, that the leadership moved in to avert a political, as well as international, blunder.

Hull Act Threatened

IT WAS not the first time GOP leadership disciplinarians had grappled with a House committee and forced a turnabout.

Early this session, Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee planned a major raid on the Reciprocal Trade Act.

Senate Foreign Relations Chairman Arthur H. Vandenberg quickly averted a similar Senate fracas by working out a State Department truce with Senate Finance Chairman Eugene Millikin.

House Ways and Means recalcitrants at first angrily spurned it. They were invited into the office of Speaker Joseph W. Martin, with Majority Leader Charles Halleck in the background. When they came out, truce flags were flying.

In each case, the near breach had occurred, not in the Senate which in normal times sets the foreign policy pace, but in the House, which is assuming more and more foreign policy powers.

The trend in foreign affairs emphasis to the harder-to-handle House is due to the predominantly economic nature of the thin-ice peace. The House holds initial power over the purse—hence a hitherto unasserted power over foreign policy itself.

When the immediate fund crisis is passed, the real test of whether Congress will revert to prewar isolation will come, not in the last days of this Congress, but in the first weeks of the next.

Bipartisan advocates of a durable foreign policy say the real danger is the next Congress (1) may not extend the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act expiring next year and (2) may quibble over funds to make the Marshall Plan work.

Double Jeopardy

UNDER the new presidential succession act, Senator Vandenberg, President Pro Tempore of the Senate, is next in line to House Speaker Martin.

Only if something happened to the President and the Speaker would Vandenberg succeed to the White House. Even then he would have to step aside when another Speaker qualified.

Vandenberg opposed and helped defeat an amendment to the Wherry bill making himself instead of Martin presidential heir. But he still likes to rib Truman and Martin about the state of their health.

When the Congressional Big Six met at the White House last week, Vandenberg owlishly asked Mr. Truman if he would do him a favor.

"What is it?" asked the President.

"Only this," grinned Vandenberg. "When you make any more of those cross-country flights, take Joe along with you, will you?"

America Flunks Geography; 2 in 3 Can't Spot Greece

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Today's Gallup Poll is an experiment suggested to Dr. Gallup by Eugene Meyer, chairman of the Executive Board of The Washington Post. It is not intended as a mere intelligence test, but as a new approach to the analysis of public opinion.

HOW much do Americans know about the geography of Europe?

After fighting two wars there and spending billions of dollars for aid, with more proposed under the Marshall Plan, American voters have some startling gaps in their knowledge as to just which country is which in Europe.

Only one third know where Greece is on the map, despite our widely discussed aid-to-Greece program.

Nearly one half do not know where Spain is. One third cannot locate France, on whose battlefields America shed blood twice in a generation.

Only one in four can pick out Czechoslovakia; still fewer can find Hungary, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia or Romania.

Even people who have had college training fall down badly in identifying various Balkan countries. Six out of ten don't know where Czechoslovakia is, and seven out of ten miss Bulgaria and Romania.

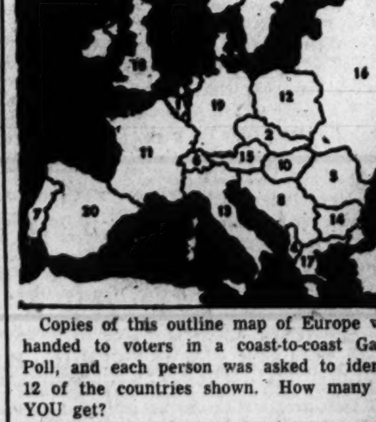
More than a third of the people who have a college education cannot find Holland, on a map of Europe. The same is true for Greece and Poland.

A TEST of the knowledge of European geography was conducted among adults from coast to coast by the Institute. An outline map with the names of the countries removed was handed to each person by interviewers, and the voters were asked to identify 12 countries—Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, England, France, Greece, Hungary, Holland, Italy, Poland, Romania, Spain and Yugoslavia.

The results, showing the percentages for correct identification, incorrect and don't know, follow:

England	72%	10%	18%
Italy	72	9	19
France	65	18	17
Spain	53	21	26
Poland	41	34	25
Holland	38	34	28
Greece	33	40	27
Czechoslovakia	25	46	29
Yugoslavia	22	50	28
Hungary	18	51	31
Romania	17	51	32
Bulgaria	13	56	31

CAN YOU PASS IT?



Copies of this outline map of Europe were handed to voters in a coast-to-coast Gallup Poll, and each person was asked to identify 12 of the countries shown. How many can YOU get?

Here are the 12 nations to identify. In the space opposite each country, write down the numeral shown on the map which you think correctly identifies that country. For example, Russia is No. 16 on the map.

Bulgaria	Italy ....
France	Spain ....
Holland	England ....
Romania	Hungary ....
Czechoslovakia	Poland ....
Greece	Yugoslavia ....

The average person with college training was able to get 7 out of 12 countries right. People with only a high school education got 6 of 12 right, on the average. Those with grade school only or no school got 3 out of 12. The average for everybody was 5 out of 12.

ANSWERS

Bulgaria 14; Czechoslovakia 2; England 18; France 11; Greece 17; Hungary 10; Holland 3; Italy 13; Poland 12; Romania 5; Spain 20; Yugoslavia 8.

What do these results mean? Four observations seem warranted:

1. Ignorance of the geography of Europe reflects the long period of our national history when we remained isolated and essentially aloof

Psychiatrist Says Man Now Finds His Hobgoblins in Heavens

'Flying Saucers' Called Forerunners of the New Atomic Folklore

By Howard W. Blakeslee

NEW YORK, July 19 (AP).—The flying disks are probably the first of a series of aerial puzzles, in the opinion of Dr. J. L. Moreno, New York psychiatrist and originator of the science of sociometry, or group organization.

Dr. Moreno believes there is no doubt that many witnesses of the flying discs really have seen what they described. All were peering into a new sky world, new because of what scientists have said will soon be flying there.

Men have been seeing things like flying discs for centuries. Now these apparitions have a new meaning. Furthermore, today there are more to be seen.

Once there were only birds, clouds, big hailstones, mirages, high ice crystals, balloons and shooting stars. Now there are planes, drifting ribbons of lightweight foil to interfere with radar, vapor trails of stratosphere planes and improved V-2 rockets.

Scientists have speculated on atomic substances which might wipe out a nation. Mostly these atomic menaces are described as coming through the air.

Today most people quite subconsciously look at the innocent heavens with a quickened interest.

Only the Form Changes

"AN analysis of the reports," Dr. Moreno says, "gives the symptoms of a mental condition from which human society suffers at present.

"The basic cause seems to be fear of coming disaster. A social psychosis of this sort is difficult to diagnose because the individuals sharing in it are normal.

"These normal feelings are infectious. Mankind has experienced many similar developments in the past. These produced the beliefs in witches, pixies, devils, giants, Santa Claus and the astrological and other cults.

"Our technological era offers a fertile field for new perils. These are linked with radar, radio, atom bombs and the like. The potentialities for creating illusions are present all the time.

Hungerford, in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, tied up whiz-discs and musical platters

"The beliefs that people take spread like wildfire because human society is highly structured. Experiences, real or rumored, spread according to specific social laws. They spread just as surely as a stone falls in accord with the law of gravitation. There is a law of social gravitation, based on emotional infectiousness of individuals for one another.

"Mankind is not just a number of individuals. Mankind consists of millions of networks through which ideas travel. The popular term is grapevine. It is because of these networks that reports, true or false, spread with such velocity. The natural networks are enhanced by the press, radio, movies, magazines and other publications.

"The flying saucers, when viewed with similar phobias of the postwar period, prognosticate a crop of similar disturbances to come.

"Man has yet to learn to control these networks, which are for human society what the nervous system is for the individual."

'Pioneer' Carries Camera

THE flying discs began on June 25, without attracting great immediate publicity. Kenneth Arnold, Boise businessman, who flies as an agent for a fire protection equipment company, said that from his plane he saw, above the Cascade range, near the Washington-Oregon State line, a string of nine objects that seemed to be moving about 1200 miles an hour. Their formation resembled the tail of a kite. Arnold said they were bigger than four-engine planes, but he could not identify them further.

Arnold was kidded by friends, deluged with phone calls. Now he feels vindicated. But now, also, he carries a camera. There is nothing far-fetched in his plan. A photograph was taken north of Seattle of a single flying object, which showed near twilight as an elongated patch of light and lasted too long to be a shooting star. The photographer, Frank Ryman of the Coast Guard, was unable to identify the object.

By July 3, flying discs had been reported in 10 States, mostly west of the Mississippi. The name had become flying saucers. The reports exploded overnight into national prominence, when Capt. E. J. Smith flew a transport plane out of Boise in early twilight. He, his first officer, Ralph Stevens, and Stewardess Marty Morrow were quoted as agreeing that all of them saw, first five, and a little later four flying discs. Both flights seemed to be in loose formation.

Smith thought at first they were other planes, and blinked his lights, but received no answer. He, too, failed to identify the objects.

Assorted Diameters

ABOUT this time the Army Air Force added an official bit, in response to growing insistence for an explanation. Capt. Tom Brown, Washington, was quoted: "We are not dismissing the possibility there is something to it—and not dismissing the possibility that it's all a hoax."

On July 9 the stories climaxed and burst like a bubble when an Air Force officer at Roswell, N. Mex., issued a statement that the flying discs had become a reality with discovery of something of that sort on a ranch near Roswell.

That statement was discussed on the air and in early editions for seven hours, before the thing arrived in Fort Worth and was identified as the radar target of a weather balloon. About a hundred of these targets are sent up daily all over the United States.

The discs were seen both day and night. They were as big as coffee can tops or big as footballs. At Spokane they were described as the size of five-room houses. In Tennessee three were reported bigger than houses. This trio emitted fire and smoke from exhausts.

There were flat, translucent plates a little more than a foot in diameter. In Denver one was reported bearing an American flag. In South Carolina a group of Army pursuit planes chased a flock of discs. In Delaware the discs resembled mayonnaise jars. At night some were seen as beautiful balls of fire. At Glens Falls, N. Y., they were described as big as auto headlights. One had red fire in front and a trail of blue smoke.

One woman said she saw a saucer with legs and it was coming toward her.

An Optical Principle

IN all reports except one, no identifying details were observed. The exception was at St. Louis, where the object was described as 300 feet distant, circular, with ribbed framework, a propeller, an exhaust and a slow rolling motion.

All descriptions fit with the fact that near the limit of vision all objects appear round. They may be bright, in reflected light or from exhaust fire, or they may look dark, but they are round. If bright, they can be seen great distances.

The apparent sizes, even near the limit of vision, vary greatly, depending on background. So do apparent speeds.

Radar failed to spot any of the discs. Mirages rarely appear so high in the sky, and not at night. High altitude ice crystals are common sights, but they have the forms of rings around the moon, or sun-dogs, which are colored patches near the sun. Meteors might account for many discs but hardly for those in the daytime.

Russell, in the Los Angeles Times, entitled this one, "The State of the Nation"

A professor in Australia and Lieut. Col. Hartwin A. Schultze, American officer in Germany, said they might be muscae volitantes, which means flying flies. These are blood corpuscles moving in the eyeball, which appear against a sky background as dark, rapidly moving spots. Their motions fail to fit flying discs. Everyone knows them as spots before the eyes.

Fear showed repeatedly in speculations that the discs were things of some foreign power making military experiments. One report credited a supposed foreign atomic flying engine with strange powers.

Lightning's Furrow

NUMEROUS objects were found on the ground. But these had not been seen in flight, or only at the very end of flight. A flying buzz-saw was picked up in Wisconsin, and a metallic thing, turtle-shaped with a back fin, in California. Eino Wepplo, at Franklin, Minn., found broken fragments of something hard and dark, in sizes from peas to apples, in his field. University of Minnesota scientists said the things were pieces of earth fused by lightning. Wepplo declared he was familiar with results of lightning hitting the ground, and that this was different. He sent the Associated Press a box of the pieces.

Edward F. Chandler, New York engineer, said that planes flying high enough to be out of ordinary sight could drop lightweight discs to learn over how much ground they would scatter. Someone, he explained, might be experimenting with duds to learn how widely discs loaded with radioactive particles would spread.

There were suspicions of radioactive clouds, the man-made kind that Congress heard of a few weeks ago as possible future military weapons.

Dr. Felix Eherenhaft, now in Vienna, in the past few years has seen under his microscope particles in the air being whirled rapidly by the magnetic forces in light. His colleague, Lilly Rona, said that perhaps in the earth's great magnetic field similar electrified particles get to whirling in large masses. They might, she said, become visible under peculiar lighting conditions.

Humor came with the discs. A sports writer said they were saucers tossed by the British to go with the cups the Yanks were winning. Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Gromyko said they were from a mighty Russian discus thrower who did not know his strength. Stalin was said to be blowing smoke rings.

Whatever else they may be, the flying discs are also new folklore in the making.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, already a veteran campaigner for the Presidency at 45, is again off to a running start in his third quest of the great prize.

If the New Yorker captures the Republican nomination in '48—and if he is able to persuade the California Governor to go along—the GOP may offer the Nation a coast-to-coast ticket: Dewey and Warren.

Those "ifs" ought to be underscored. For between Dewey and the Republican nomination this time are some obstacles, enough of them to discourage any flat-footed predictions about what is going to happen when the National Convention takes place next June in Philadelphia.

The biggest hazard may be a crowded track at Philadelphia. In a dozen or so States, politicians are talking about entering the favorite-son candidates. Some of these favorite sons—Taft and Stassen, for example—will be serious contenders. In most cases, however, they will be supported by their State delegations only until some political leader decides that a break is due and that it is time to line up behind a likely winner.

It was such a prospect that led Gov. James H. Duff of Pennsylvania to predict a "wide open" convention next year, with a free-for-all scramble for the nomination. It was also the basis for a statement by Gov. Thomas J. Herbert of Ohio that "Nobody has a lock on the nomination at this time."

Restless Delegates

THE DANGER to Governor Dewey, of course, is this: If a sizable number of State delegations continue to vote for their favorite sons and deadlock the convention for four or five ballots, the delegates may get restless, ditch the New Yorker and rally around somebody else..

Who would that somebody else be?

There is no answer to that right now; none, that is, that comes in anything like a GOP chorus. And right there lies one of Dewey's greatest advantages.

His backers are fond of quoting the political aphorism that you can't beat somebody with nobody. They don't mean that there aren't other attractive men in the party. What they are saying is that there doesn't seem to be anyone else on whom large elements of the party can agree. So far there is no sign of a "Stop Dewey" movement and no indication that the backers of favorite sons have any such movement in mind.

The foregoing—which may have to be substantially revised in the 11 months before Philadelphia—is a picture as it shaped up at the Governors' Conference in Salt Lake City this week.

Non-Partisan

STRICTLY speaking, politics is never on the agenda of a Governors' Conference. That organization, which grew out of a meeting in Washington in 1907 when President Theodore Roosevelt summoned the Governors to talk about conservation, is nonpartisan. The purpose of it is "to draw the country together in thought . . . in a united purpose."

Actually, of course, political talk dominates such a gathering, especially in advance of a campaign year. The thirty-ninth annual Governors' Conference was thus a sort of a tuning up for the quadrennial battle that lies ahead.

Nobody who was at Salt Lake City could doubt that Dewey was well out in front in the race for the GOP nomination. Little changed from the fighting candidate who opposed Franklin D. Roosevelt three years ago, Dewey was unquestionably the lion of the occasion. Crowds swarmed around him as he strode through the lobby of the Hotel Utah, or leaned over the balcony when he entered the Mormon Tabernacle for a concert.

Only once did Dewey get any real competition from the standpoint of applause, and that was the night that Secretary of State Marshall spoke. In advance of the speech, all the Governors were introduced from the head table in the Lafayette ballroom of the Utah. The ovation given Dewey was tops—tops, that is, until Gov. Earl Warren of California was introduced.

Warren got at least as much applause as Dewey, and some thought it was more spontaneous.

Blamed on Conceit

BUT if the Salt Lake City gathering brought out Dewey's strength, it also revealed a good deal of hostility to him.

His foes seemed to be divided into three groups: Those who fancied themselves as presidential timber, those who were backing favorite sons and those who had no particular choice but just didn't seem to like Dewey.

These latter—talking off the record, of course—were critical of Dewey for a number of reasons. They didn't see why he couldn't have come to the conference in the same unostentatious way the others did, instead of starting out early on a "vacation tour" that they regarded as a political barnstorming trip.

Some even criticized Dewey for not wearing an official badge. All of the Governors were given such badges, with their names in little brass frames so that they might be identified. Those who caught Dewey without his badge figured that he was going on the assumption that he was one Governor who did not need identification.

Governor Warren was reported to be sore at Governor Dewey at one stage of the conference. The two of them had agreed, so the story goes, that they would not hold press conferences because of the nonpartisan character of the gathering.

Warren did not hold any.

Dewey did, but only after reporters had urged one on him. He confined himself to State problems. Nevertheless, he got the headlines next morning, and Warren, according to his friends, didn't like it a bit.

Still Has Pick

JUST the same, from all indications, Warren remains Dewey's choice for a running mate if Dewey gets the presidential nomination. Several things were cited to bear this out.

Dewey, a trustee of Union College in upstate New York, arranged to have Warren make the commencement address there last month. He also had Warren as his guest at the Governor's Mansion in Albany. In addition to this, Dewey has been very generous in some of the things he has said about Warren.

Then there is also the very practical consideration that Warren could be counted on to give the GOP ticket the fat electoral vote of California.

Warren, who turned down the vice presidential nomination in '44, has never committed himself this time. He is as cagey as he is courteous. Some who know him say he has a good reason for not talking about the No. 2 place on the ticket. They suspect that he believes the lightning might strike him and land him in the No. 1 place.

Sealed Papers to be Opened Saturday

Experts Doubt Lincoln Vault Hides 'Sensation'

Carl Sandburg, the Lincoln biographer, will describe for readers of The Washington Post the importance and the significance of the Lincoln papers. Mr. Sandburg's articles will appear in The Washington Post starting next Sunday.

By E. B. Long

CHICAGO, July 19 (AP).—The papers of Abraham Lincoln, to be opened July 26 in Washington after being sealed for 21 years, probably will not reveal any sensational new events in Lincoln's life, but they will be of great value to historians.

This is the general opinion of a group of leading Lincoln authorities.

Although the life and writings of the Civil War President have been studied minutely, there has been one big gap. This was the large amount of material found in Lincoln's desk, including letters to him, drafts of documents and many other items left to his son, Robert Todd Lincoln.

Robert Lincoln kept these papers for many years and permitted no one to see them except the President's secretaries, John Nicolay and John Hay. They had use of the papers for their monumental "Life of Lincoln," but every page of their work was censored by the President's son.

In 1923 Robert stipulated that his father's papers should not be opened until 21 years after his own death. He died July 26, 1926.

'Plot' Clews Unlikely

THERE have been reports of sensational things in these papers. Some who believe there was a Cabinet plot against Lincoln's political career and even his life have hoped these writings would provide some clues.

However, most scholars now feel either that no such plot existed or, if it did, that these papers will neither confirm nor deny it.

Dr. J. G. Randall of the University of Illinois, author of many books on Lincoln, including the recent "Lincoln the Liberal Statesman" and "Lincoln the President," says:

"We know that the papers are voluminous and cover a vast range of subjects. Their full import will require elaborate study not only of this collection but of related material. Even after they are opened, therefore, their significance should not be too hastily stated.

"We know of certain letters Lincoln received, even of letters that he asked to have written to him. Where he wrote instructions that were issued over the name of a Cabinet secretary, or (conversely) where an order written by War Secretary Stanton would appear over the President's name, the papers ought to reveal the true situation."

Political Sidelights

PAUL ANGLE, director of the Chicago Historical Society and author of "The Lincoln Reader," says:

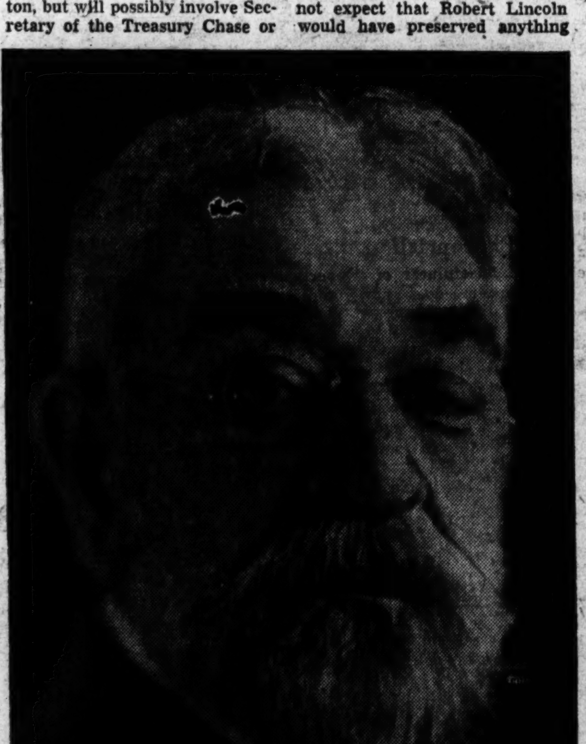
"I don't think there will be anything startling. The collection is historically important in two respects: (1) Making many of Lincoln's letters available will enable one to establish for the first time the accurate text of many of his letters and speeches. (2) Revealing letters to Lincoln not heretofore available should throw considerable light on the politics of the period."

Dr. Otto Eisenschiml, noted chemist and author of many books, including "Why Was Lincoln Murdered," and coauthor of the soon to be published "American Iliad," believes that the papers will be "A complete flop as far as anything sensational is concerned. Anyone looking for anything startling will be disappointed. All the important papers have been burned and only collateral material has been left."

As one of the leading dealers in Lincolniana and coauthor of the forthcoming "American Iliad," Ralph Newman of the Abraham Lincoln Book Shop, says: "The papers won't be sensational. If there is any evidence of treason, it will not in my opinion incriminate Secretary Stanton, but will possibly involve Secretary of the Treasury Chase or Lincoln's first Secretary of War, Cameron."

Lloyd Lewis, newspaper columnist and author of "Myths After Lincoln" and "Sherman—Fighting Prophet," says:

"It will be extremely interesting to read the incoming mail from generals, politicians, Senators and others trying to influence Lincoln's decisions. I do not expect that Robert Lincoln would have preserved anything that would alter the accepted portrait of Lincoln."



Underwood & Underwood

ROBERT TODD LINCOLN was living a secluded life in Georgetown when this portrait was made in the late summer of 1923, three years before his death. It was about this time that he decided to seal his father's papers

ROBERT LINCOLN himself was quite a famous individual and the center of much argument. He was Secretary of War under Presidents Garfield and Arthur. He also served as Ambassador to Britain. He was president of the Pullman Car Co. and a power in financial and legal circles.

Robert was one of the few men to be near at the deaths of the three assassinated Presidents. He was at the bedside of his father when he died; at the Washington railroad station when Garfield was shot, and on the platform at Buffalo when an anarchist shot McKinley.

Why did Robert Lincoln seal his father's papers? Many stories are current but one of the most important comes from Dr. Eisenschiml.

He says he talked with Robert's secretary some years ago and she told her version:

A former Senator from Indiana, Albert J. Beveridge, had begun his book on Lincoln and went to Robert for facts in 1923. Beveridge reportedly had found evidence that convinced him that Thomas Lincoln was not the father of the war-time President and apparently he asked Robert about it. The secretary said she soon heard loud voices from the room and Beveridge rushed out, his face purple.

The secretary was then told by Robert to write a letter to his life insurance company asking how long Beveridge might possibly live. Investigation showed that Beveridge would probably not live beyond 1943.

Lincoln is said to have told his secretary, "We will add a few years to that, then my father's papers will be of no use to him." (Beveridge died in 1927.)

Nancy Hanks Query

REINHARD H. LUTHIN, associate in history and bibliographer of American History at Columbia University, Lincoln scholar, author of "The First Lincoln Campaign" and coauthor of "Lincoln and the Patronage," says:

"The chief value of the Robert Todd Lincoln collection, so far as revealing hitherto new data on the Lincoln story, will probably be contained in the letters sent to Lincoln by others.

"If such written messages addressed to America's favorite son happen to be in the handwriting of intimate friends of his early years, from members of his Cabinet, from congressional leaders or key military commanders, some light might be thrown on unsolved points in Lincolniana.

"There are numerous disputed points in the Lincoln story that badly need illustration. Was Lincoln's mother, Nancy Hanks Lincoln, born out of wedlock? Did Lincoln ever become engaged to marry Ann Rutledge? How much did Mentor Graham, the New Salem schoolmaster, contribute to his education?

"How reliable is the provocative testimony of Lincoln's friend and law partner, William H. Herndon? Why did Lincoln remove the master strategist, Gen. George B. McClellan, from the command of the Army of the Potomac at a critical hour? Is there anything valid in the insinuation of Otto Eisenschiml in his volume, 'Why Was Lincoln Murdered?', that the radical Republicans and especially Secretary Stanton were responsible for Lincoln's death? These are only a few of the unanswered questions confronting Lincoln students."

Luthin adds, however: "In my opinion, no far-reaching revolutionary reinterpretations can be expected from investigation of the Robert Todd Lincoln collection; although, assuredly, little gaps in the Lincoln story will be filled."

Lincoln 'Unveiling' Will Lift Load Off Two Minds

THE "Lincoln papers"—comprising between 15,000 and 20,000 documents—will be opened at 4 p. m. Saturday in the rotunda of the Library of Congress before scholars from all over the country.

Only two living persons know what are in the papers. Dr. C. Percy Powell, head of the library's manuscript division, and his assistant, Mrs. Helen Bullock, indexed the material. Shortly before his death Robert Todd Lincoln amended his deed to give the library permission to open the papers for that purpose.

Powell and his assistant have been forbidden to make use of their knowledge even to the extent of taking private notes from memory for future scholarly work.

The indexing stretched over 30 months. Since the start, Powell and his assistant have been posing as virtually "deaf and dumb."

Asked if he would be relieved when Saturday comes and the secrets are out, Powell replied:

"To be 100 per cent truthful, I suppose I'd like to keep them for myself a little longer."

He added, seriously and perhaps significantly, that he would be glad when this "more" information was available to all.

The papers have been recorded on microfilm for quick distribution to educational institutions after Saturday. The filming was done on an assembly line to prevent workers from getting an idea of what it was all about.

A set of the film is nearly two miles long—10.300 feet. It will cost $645. The library said that microfilm was decided upon because the cost of enlarged paper copies would be prohibitive—$5,750,000 a set.

Charles Moore, of the library's manuscript staff, who died without knowing the riddle of the papers, predicted that they would disclose "little unpublished material calculated to change estimates of men and manners." David C. Mearns, the Library's Lincoln authority, comments:

"I do not know why Moore insisted on that. He was a close friend of Lincoln's son and the two conferred frequently during the building of the Lincoln Memorial. He might have based it on something Lincoln said to him."

Mearns appeared inclined to believe the documents mirror spite in Lincoln's Cabinet and quarrels among Union generals. He discounted the theory that they reveal treason.

Psychic Tests Work Better in the Light

By Alton L. Blakeslee

NEW YORK, July 19 (AP).—New experiments indicate that some psychic abilities may work better in normal light, rather than in the darkness usually preferred by mediums.

The tests are reported by J. M. Bevan, an assistant in the parapsychology laboratory at Duke University, in the Journal of Parapsychology published there. The laboratory is well known for its reports on extrasensory perception (ESP), in which some persons have shown ability to name the cards turned up by another person. They made scores higher than those predicted by pure chance.

Bevan conducted such tests with 12 men and women who sat, one at a time, in a room which sometimes was dark and the rest of the time was lighted. Bevan sat in another room, and signaling devices told him when to pick up another card for the subject to try to identify.

In half the runs through the deck, Bevan did not look at the cards. This was to test clairvoyance. In the other runs, he looked at the card while the subject tried to identify it.

In 96 runs through the deck, Bevan said, the 12 subjects made better scores when the room was lighted. They scored more correct calls than the average predicted by mathematical chance. When the room was dark, their scores fell below the average.

The average scores were higher in the extrasensory perception test runs that in those testing clairvoyance, he added.

The models, four-tenths the size of the Navy Bearcat fighters, are dropped from a regular airplane, and dive behind the weight of 500 pounds of lead in the nose. The models dive faster than 600 miles per hour, and are pulled out of their dives and parachuted by automatic controls. Radios in the models transmit information to ground receiving stations during the dive.

Using moustraps, Prof. Isay Balinkin is giving his physics students at the University of Cincinnati a rough idea of how the chain reaction in an atom bomb explosion works. In the bottom of a chicken wire cage he sets 72 mousetraps, lined up close together. Then 144 little rubber balls are placed on the traps.

Another ball dropped from the top of the cage springs one trap and starts two balls bouncing which then spring the other traps in a maelstrom of flying balls.

The mousetraps are like atoms and the rubber balls like neutrons in a chain reaction, he explains. The first ball dropped is like the neutron "bullet" which sets off the explosion, striking into the nucleus of a uranium or plutonium atom and setting free more neutrons to split more atoms.

'Ancestry Traced Back Seven Generations'

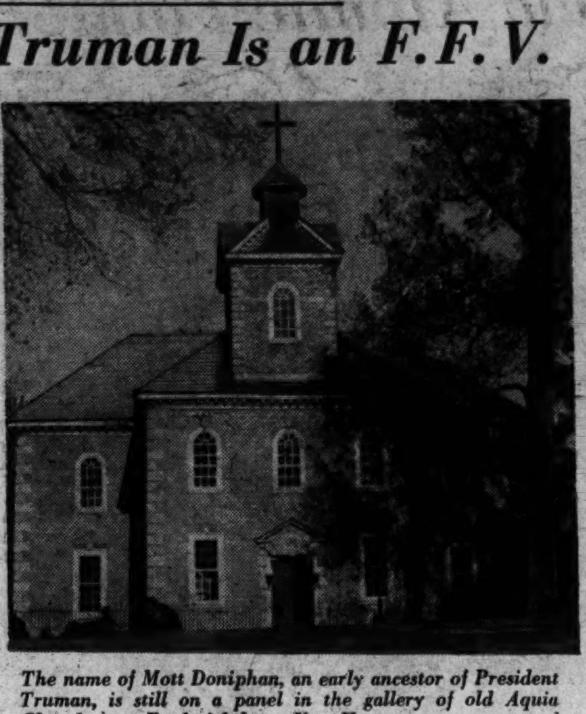
President Truman Is an F.F.V.

By Rebecca Marston

WHEN HOMESPUN Harry S. Truman succeeded brilliant, polished Franklin D. Rosevelt as President, it was as if the poles had touched. And one of the greatest contrasts between the two men, in the public mind, was their family backgrounds.

Roosevelt was the scion of an aristocratic Dutch line of statesmen, landowners, merchant princes, office-holders. Truman, in most eyes, was just one of the herd, the offspring of small town, middleclass parents whose family motto was "Show me."

This popular acceptance of the Trumans as "just folks" has been given a jolt by George H. S. King of Fredericksburg, Va., and J. Emerson Miller of Louisville, Ky., prominent genealogists in their States. In a recent issue of Tyler's Quarterly Historical and Genealogical Magazine, and in personal interviews, they have contended that President Truman is descended from some of the oldest families in the Northern Neck of Virginia.



The name of Mott Doniphan, an early ancestor of President Truman, is still on a panel in the gallery of old Aquia Church, near Fredericksburg, Va. He was a vestryman and senior warden when the church was built in 1757

Washington Neighbor

WORKING FROM faded county and court records, and without the aid of letters, diaries or other personal memorabilia, King and Miller have traced the President's ancestry back seven generations to one Capt. Alexander Doniphan, a merchant of Plymouth, England, who emigrated to Virginia about 1672 and settled in Westmoreland County. His Potomac River plantation was close to those of Col. John Washington and Maj. Andrew Monroe, ancestors of Presidents Washington and Monroe. Doniphan, himself, was believed to be a descendant of Castillian nobility.

The captain prospered, and after some years moved to Richmond (then Rappahannock) County, where he married the second of his three wives, Margaret Mott, daughter of one of the largest landowners in the Northern Neck. In 1705 Doniphan was honored by his fellow citizens with an appointment as captain of a troop of cavalry.

The firstborn of Alexander and Margaret Doniphan died at an early age, and the second son, Mott, inherited a considerable estate. About 1710 he married Rosannah Anderson, daughter of Capt. John Anderson and his wife Mary, daughter of John Matthews. John Matthews antedates Capt. Alexander Doniphan as a resident of the New World; it is recorded that on October 10, 1666, he was appointed "surveighor of the road from Pasbetanzie Creek to Potomac Creek." Therefore he would appear to be the President's earliest American ancestor.

Honored by Church

MOTT DONIPHAN'S name has been familiar to the parishioners of Aquia Church, 14 miles north of Fredericksburg, for almost 200 years. He was a vestryman and senior warden when the present structure was built in 1757, and his name is on a panel in the gallery.

Anderson Doniphan, Mott's second son, was rich before he was born. In a flowery will dated in 1717, old Captain Doniphan specified that two extensive tracts of land along the Rappahannock were to be the property of Mott's second son. Anderson was born the following year.

Anderson Doniphan obviously lived in a grand manner. County records invariably style him, "Anderson Doniphan, Gentleman." His first wife was childless, and after her death he married Magdalin Monteith, daughter of Thomas Monteith, Gentleman, a native of Glasgow. Magdalin bore him a daughter, Elizabeth, in 1759, and there the name Doniphan is dropped from the President's lineage.

The name has also disappeared from that section of Virginia, but many prominent Virginia families are Doniphan descendants. One was Col. William Smith (1797-1887) of Warrenton, twice Governor of Virginia. He was a great-grandson of Mott Doniphan, as was Gen. Alexander William Doniphan (1808-1887), who carried the name to Missouri.

Kentucky Migrants

ELIZABETH Doniphan was only two when her father died and was only 15 when she was married to Richard Shipp, whose plantation was just across the Rappahannock. In 1793 the Shipps followed the westward trend to Kentucky, where their eighth child, Virginia-born Emma Grant Shipp, married another Virginia emigrant, William Truman, a prominent farmer. William Truman received a land bounty for his services in the War of 1812.

President Truman's grandfather, Anderson Shipp Truman, was the fifth child of William and Emma Truman. Born in Shelby County, Ky., in 1816, he became a well-to-do school director. In 1846 he married Jane Holmes, whose widowed mother had moved from Shelby County to Westport Landing (now Kansas City), Mo., but who returned to Kentucky to visit her sisters.

The Anderson Trumans soon moved to Missouri where President Truman's father, John Anderson Truman, their fifth child, was born at Jackson on December 5, 1861. The President's mother, Martha Ellen Young, was also the daughter of a family which had moved to Missouri from Shelby County. She is now 94.

President Truman was their first child. His brother, John Vivian, was born in 1886 and his sister, Mary Jane, in 1889.

King believes his research has solved the mystery of the President's middle initial. He thinks it stands for Shipp. Mr. Truman has said it didn't stand for anything.

'Smith's Natives Come Home'

Camp Meeting Time On a Chesapeake Isle

By Myron S. Kaufmann

EWELL, MD., July 19 (AP).—Smith's Island natives who have forsaken the hardy isolation of their windswept sandspit in Chesapeake Bay for wordly attractions outside, will come filtering home next week.

It's camp meeting time.

New Orleans can have its Mardi Gras. On this island group, 10 miles off Crisfield and the southernmost reaches of Maryland's Eastern Shore, it's the camp meeting.

This year's edition starts next Sunday, July 27, and continues through the following Sabbath.

The stay-at-homes are busy getting ready. Things are buzzing in the three villages, many of whose inhabitants still live much as their ancestors did. Houses are being brightened for visitors. Larders are stocked for dinners of crabs, clams, fish, chicken and home-baked bread and pastries.

Big Town Preachers

CAMP meeting time is the yearly occasion when native sons and daughters who have gone abroad return if they can. Most of them come by the little ferry which provides the only regular access from the mainland.

They will revel in the big dinners and the family reunions, but much of the time will be spent in church. Exhorters will bring close the staunch Methodism which often has sustained them as howling blizzards and sheet ice threatened starvation.

The Rev. Lloyd Townsend is working up the program for the camp meeting. He is pastor of the church at Ewell, largest of the three communities.

Visiting ministers from the Wilmington Methodist Conference will provide the islanders with a different pastor each day. The daily meetings will be followed every evening with a song service.

Smith Island is normally connected to the mainland only by the ferry. Throughout camp meeting week a special fleet of motorboats will handle the additional traffic.

'Dried Up' County

DESPITE their isolation, the island fisherfolk have often made their voices heard in county and State affairs.

Back in 1933, when repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment was a major national issue, early ballot returns showed Somerset County joining most of the rest of Maryland in voting to repudiate prohibition. Then the returns came in from Smith's Island, and Somerset County plopped over to the dry side.

The islanders had voted 165 dry to 4 for repeal.

Then there are occasions—as in the winter of 1936—when storms threaten the very existence of the inhabitants. More than once private planes, bombing planes and blimps have been called out to stem starvation and freezing as food supplies ran low.

Tradition says the island was visited by Capt. John Smith. Hence the name.

As late as the early thirties the island had been invaded by only a single telephone—that used by the Coast Guard. Modern conveniences have gradually made headway. Only last month an application was filed with the Public Service Commission to provide the 1000-odd residents with electricity.

Mecca Pilgrims Fight $155 Tax

Bombay, India (AP).—Mualana Saifa Nadvi, Moslem editor, says an influential group of Indian Moslem theologians is attempting to organize Mohammedans throughout the world to demand abolition of the Saudi Arabian tax on the holy pilgrimage to Mecca—about $155 for each pilgrim.

"The pilgrimage to Mecca to pay honor to the prophet is a sacred thing for which Moslems sometimes save for nearly a lifetime," he says. "These tens of thousands of visitors are an important economic factor to Saudi Arabia. India annually sends about 20,000 pilgrims to Mecca to pray at the Prophet's Tomb."

'Steep Tax Cuts Smoking 25 Per cent'

British Curb 'Lust' for Gaspers

By William L. Phillips

LONDON, July 19 (AP).—What would you do if cigarettes went up overnight from 48 to 68 cents a pack—try snuff?

Some of the British have, since the government announced the new tobacco tax April 15. Others smoke herbs and claim they like them.

In general, the British are taking the latest of their continuing shortages in their stride. Hugh Dalton, Chancellor of the Exchequer and the man who started it, described himself as "astonished" at the way the people have been able to "curb their lust in this respect."

Figures show smoking at about 75 per cent of what it was "before the budget," which the British now say about as often as they say "before the war." Dalton's announcement in late June that there would be a "substantial" cut in tobacco imports in the next 12 months apparently meant that the government was satisfied that the trend was flattening out and would hold somewhere near the present level.

If it does, it will mean that British buyers will take only 150 million dollars worth of the 1947 American tobacco crop instead of the 200 million dollars worth they bought last year. When Dalton announced the new tax he hoped to save only 30 million dollars.

Better Than Rationing

DALTON laid it down in ABC terms. The country, he said, was smoking nearly a third more than before the war and was buying 80 per cent of it in the United States. The Empire just doesn't grow enough.

There was nothing to do but cut down in order to save dollars for necessities. Dalton chose taxation because he was assured that rationing would not work, and he made it steep, raising the import duty on a pound of tobacco from £1 15s sixpence (about $7.15) to £2 15 and 10 (about $12.65).

The immediate reaction was gloom and a rash of vows to quit the vile stuff. Then came the silly stage, with business executives rolling their own and gentlemen who always had fancied they had catarrh "benefiting" themselves with pipes full of herbs.

The shakedown was on in less than a month, however. Most of the vows to quit have been abandoned, although many have cut down their smoking to fit their prebudget budget; others have adjusted their budget to pay the added freight.

It hasn't turned into a political football. The only howl raised in Commons was for a tax-free concession to old age pensioners, to which the government agreed.

Cut to Own Cloth

TO the man in the pub it's become a problem to be met on an individual basis, like buzz bombs.

A woman pharmacist says her civil servant husband has cut down because he's rolling his own and "doesn't like to offer them to people." A butcher's assistant and a charwoman each cut down from 20 cigarettes a day to 10.

But a window washer says, "If it cost a pound an ounce I'd have it," and an electrician who rolled his own before the budget because he didn't like standing in line for cigarettes, now says he buys cigarettes because it's hard to find tobacco for rolling.

The Ministry of Health cracked down on a budding racket in one London suburb of making fags from street butts to sell in pubs for about two and a half cents each.

The tobacco companies say there is a definite demand for the cheaper brands, but they haven't been able to work it out in figures yet. One company, using psychology, has produced a 15-cigarette pack to sell for two shillings sixpence, the British "half-dollar" coin, just twopence over the old price for 20. They say it's going well.

Tobacconists, the little fellows with hole-in-the-wall stands, are suffering the most financially, but they have ideas. One had his sign repainted from "Tobacconist" to read, "Tobacconist and Confectioner."

Snuff, which was very popular in England in the eighteenth century, isn't really making much of a comeback, according to attendants of the Subway Kiosk chain currently featuring it.

"We just put it under the glass along with the lighters, rolling machines and such," one said, "to keep people from looking at too many cigarettes and feeling bad."

'Honest' Elections Promised

Venezuelans Believe New Constitution Is A Step Beyond Ours

By Ray Josephs

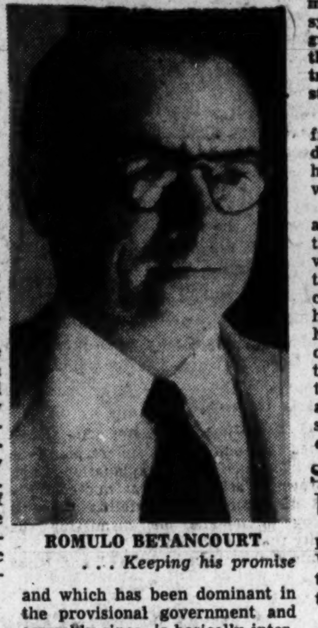
(Author of "Argentine Diary" and veteran Latin-American correspondent now making a postwar survey of the other Americas)

CARACAS, July 19.—"Completely fair and honest elections" will be held here within the next three months. Venezuela's first constitutional president will probably be installed October 18, third anniversary of the revolution which established in this Latin republic the first postwar semisocialist government in the Hemisphere.

That assurance was given me today by high officials of the revolutionary junta or governing board as Venezuela's 160-member constituent assembly completed the seven months' job of drawing up a new constitution.

The assembly sessions were in many ways like those of the United States in its founding days. Everyone addressed everyone else as "Citizen Deputy" or "Citizen President." Subcommittee members, often debating furiously almost 'round the clock, carried copies of the United States Constitution and of United States laws for reference. Public interest was tremendous. Crowds filled the balconies and jammed the streets outside.

Two things brought the picture up to date. First, the modern trappings of movie cameras and radio microphones carried every session to Venezuela's four million people, some in areas so remote they're still inhabited by poison dart-throwing savages. Secondly, the constitution itself turned out in many respects to be what its adherents claim is a document even more democratic than the United States Constitution.



ROMULO BETANCOURT
. . . Keeping his promise

Suffrage at 18

FOR example, it gives the vote to all men and women over 18 without educational tests, poll taxes, property ownership or other restrictions; its labor provisions are more liberal than the original Wagner Act, and it embraces the concept that "property must be socially useful or be subject to expropriation."

The reason for the broad vote, leaders told me, was that during the 27-year iron rule of Juan Vicente Gomez and the two regimes which followed his death in 1935, voting was extremely limited.

The liberal labor provisions, officials said, were not directed against the United States Creole Petroleum Co., the Dutch-English owned Royal Shell or any of the other oil companies which are the principal industries here. Labor leaders, incidently, had an important role in shaping the constitution, which includes profit-sharing for workers, wage minimums and vacations.

No Expropriation

THE "usefulness of property" concept does not indicate any desire for expropriation of oil holding, I was informed. Unlike Mexico in the past, here the companies do not own oil lands. They merely have the right to develop them. In return they pay taxes and royalties which, they say, come to just about 50 per cent of their profits.

Even among the Communists—whose strength here is increasing, as everywhere in Latin America—there was little talk of expropriation.

"That's too far ahead; we're not ready for such things yet," said Juan Fuenmayor, one of the two Communist delegates to the Constituent Assembly.

The dominant political party, Accion Democratica, is even farther away from any such idea. There is, in fact, little of the bitterness against "Yanqui exploiters" found in many other Latin countries. Even the Communist newspapers print many articles favorable to the United States.

Budget Is Doubled

ACCION DEMOCRATICA, which worked with army elements in staging the revolution and which has been dominant in the provisional government and assembly since, is basically interested in three other things:

First, it wants a vast public works program—roads, docks, housing, airports. Venezuela is one of the world's richest governments because of its oil income. In the past much of the money went to line the pockets of politicos. Now it's hoped the proposed budget of more than one billion bolivars (200 million dollars), twice that of the previous government, will follow the popular slogan: "Plant the oil." Venezuela, incidently, does not require United States loans or credits.

Secondly, Venezolanos want a mass program of public health and education. From 50 to 60 per cent of the population is illiterate. Last year more than 400,000 rural children were denied schooling because they were no seats for them. In contrast, new schools now being built are employing progressive educational methods.

Thirdly, by a broad program of developing agriculture, industry and resources, it is hoped to end Venezuela's dependence on the outside world and to cut down prices which for a generation before post-war inflation were higher here than almost anywhere else in the world.

Election in Bag

NOW that the constitution has been approved, the next step is to hold constitutional elections. Romulo Betancourt, a youngish thinker who was once a Communist leader but who now is regarded by the Communists with the disfavor only they can hold against those who've left the party, has been president since the revolution. He and other members of the governing junta pledged themselves at that time not to become candidates when elections were called. I found no evidence that the promise would be broken.

There's little doubt among Venezuelans however, that Betancourt's party, Accion Democratica, will win the presidency hands down and that the program which it has been largely instrumental in shaping will be put into effect. Governors, however, will not be chosen until 1950, since it was felt the "country's situation was still too unstable to permit local fights."

Australians Build Secret 'Rocket Town'

CANBERRA (AP).—Prefabricated houses for 600 families will be flown in by air transports to establish a rocket range town for scientists and workmen at the Mount Eba rangehead in South Australia.

An RAAF construction unit will move into the rangehead site immediately to build an aerodrome and hangars. These are expected to be ready for use within three months.

Meanwhile light aircraft already are landing on an airstrip at the site and some equipment has been flown in.

Elaborate precautions are being taken to preserve secrecy about the range plans. A high authority has disclosed that none of the regular progress reports to the government are committed to paper. Personal reports are made by Director of General Works Louis Loder to Minister for Works and Housing Nelson Lemmon to prevent a possibility of leakage from documents.

Because of developments in the design of rocket bombs, it is stated, elaborate launching apparatus will not be necessary. New modifications enable the rockets to take off without a powerful backthrust at the ground level and to develop speed after the take-off.

A complete township with a school and other amenities for 600 families is planned.

2-Year Yoke Clamped on Bulgars

By Dimiter Mishev

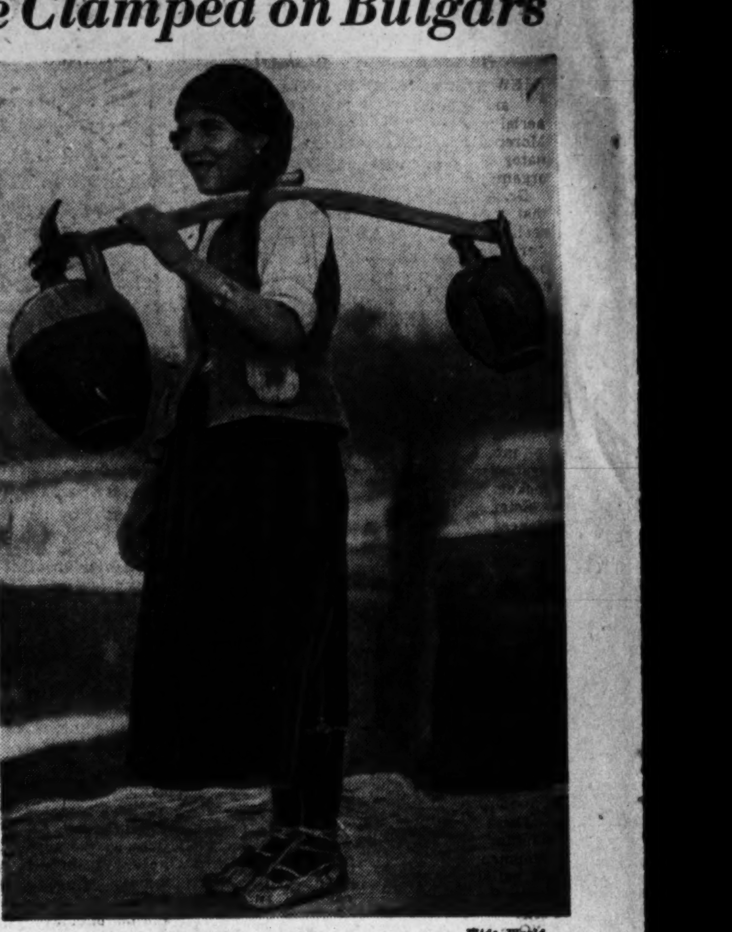
SOFIA, July 19 (AP).—Bulgaria's government, under Communist Premier Georgi Dimitrov, has made its two-year plan the dominating factor in the nation's life.

The emphasis is on hard work. Not only must the war damage be mended but, as Dimitrov put it: "Bulgaria has to cover within one to two decades the ground covered by other nations in centuries."

To this end the government has encouraged the growth of militant organs patterned on those of Russia—shock brigades, a youth movement, a speedup movement like the Stakhanov system, regimentation of many groups. It is driving to change this backward agricultural country into a modern, well-balanced state.

Meanwhile it must recover from the Nazi occupation, two devastating droughts and the heavy burdens imposed by a lost war.

The work campaign goes on alongside a bitter political battle in the constituent assembly, which is framing a new constitution. There the government is cracking down on the opposition, having jailed Nikola Petkov, its leader, and expelled 23 members of the Agrarian Party. Opposition newspapers ceased publication several weeks ago, partly as a result of the mechanical staffs' refusal to work with the editorial staffs.



Wide World

Everyone has a task under the Dimitrov Plan. This 13-year-old peasant girl in the Samokov district carries water from the well just as Rebecca did 2000 years ago

Statutory Duty

UNDER the government's program every Bulgarian is expected to work, young and old. When one is done with his own task, he is expected to volunteer to help on another job.

This emphasis on work has been translated into constitutional phrases such as, "Labor is honor" and "He who does not work must not eat," in those sections of the new constitution already written.

In the vanguard of those who work hard are the members of the big mass organizations: the trade unions, the Organization of Democratic Youth, the Bulgarian peasantry and the National Women's Union.

The women's union is headed by Mrs. Tsola Dragoicheva, who is secretary-general of the central committee of the Fatherland Front, a member of parliament and one of the principal Communist leaders in the Balkans.

(Mrs. Dragoicheva—reputedly trained in the Communist International in Russia—twice was sentenced to death in Bulgaria, once in absentia. The other time she escaped the penalty by claiming pregnancy. At that time, in 1925, when she was 25, her beauty was said to have been spectacular.

(After she became Fatherland Front secretary in 1944 she was for all practical purposes the ruler of Bulgaria. During this period the entire Filoff government, which had sentenced her to death in absentia in 1942, was executed.

(Her power has been reported lessened since Dimitrov became premier.)

Reaches Into Nursery

THE union has 300,000 members, and its 3465 sections extend the organization's tentacles to every part of the country and to all phases of women's activities. It works in close collaboration with the labor unions and the youth group.

Its annual report for 1946 showed that it had held 42,749 organizational meetings, 63,519 general meetings, 10,288 public meetings, 30,199 reports and lectures, 8108 evening parties, 828 theater performances, 38,252 sewing circles (sediankas) and supported 2000 summer homes caring for 44,200 children and 137 nurseries sheltering 4538 children.

The General Trade Union (ORPS) is nonpartisan, but is not divorced from politics. Of the nation's 700,000 workers engaged in production (Bulgaria's population is 7,000,000) at least 550,000 are members of 32 trade unions belonging to ORPS. ORPS is a member of the World Federation of Trade Unions and supported the WFTU's campaigns for Spanish workers, for the Greek trade union and for admission of WFTU to the United Nations.

The Democratic Youth Organization, with more than a million members, is the real vanguard of the Fatherland Front government and one of the main backers of the two-year plan.

Cut Rail Tunnels

IT HAS more than 80,000 volunteers, called brigadiers, working on rail, dam, road, pass, wire and other construction. Its main job at present is construction of the 40-mile Sofia-Volujak rail line through mountainous terrain. Three tunnels already have pushed through the mountains by 26,000 boys and girls. The line will form an important link for Balkan trade with the Near East and South Africa.

One of the principal work developments in postwar Bulgaria is the rise of the brigadiers. The brigades are made up of technicians, specialists, craftsmen, men of free professions and others who devote part of their leisure time to the common good. Many women participate.

The bridgadiers are especially active in the cooperative farms. In 1946 the city brigades made 1397 visits to cooperative farms, which means that every one was visited from three to five times.

The movement began March 28, 1945, when a group of workers from the Muhlhaupt factory in Rousse went to help fellow workers in the village of Svalenik. By September of that year the movement had grown until there were 6269 brigades, with 272,170 members. In 1946 these brigades accomplished 5,194,008 labor days.

Another movement for speeding work has grown up in the "Udarnik" movement. Udarnik means the same as Stakhanov in Russia.

(Alexei G. Stakhanov was a Soviet coal miner who, in 1935, developed a method of speeding up his work, a method adapted for other Soviet workers later.)

In Bulgaria it means overreaching the production norms. Under the Udarnik system a norm is officially set and workers compete to see who will surpass it and by how much. The man who does so becomes a Udarnik or, literally, a man who shocks or hits.

Both the trade union and the government devote special care to the Udarniks. They are insured 20 to 25 days rest, they get higher food rations and added opportunities for advancement. The names of Udarniks are published in the papers, they sit in the front row at meetings and celebrations and get to talk personally to Dimitrov.

Thus, while news to the outside world about Bulgaria seems principally to concern the struggle of the government against the opposition—which it bitterly labels as "foreign agents" or as "representatives of international reaction"—the Bulgarian citizen principally is concerned with his own hard work.

Chest Survey

Washington can feel relief that a majority of the Citizens Chest Survey Committee resisted the divisive ideas of a minority and recommended that the Community Chest continue to embrace the broad range of health, welfare, educational and recreational service agencies which are now its constituents. If this recommendation is followed, the community will be able, as in the past, to meet its major philanthropic obligations through response to a single, combined fund-raising campaign. And intelligent integration of the community's social programs will be possible. The minority proposal, embracing a sort of seventeenth century almshouse attitude toward social welfare with ugly implications of racial discrimination, could end only in a tragic segmentation of the Chest and a multiplicity of conflicting appeals to the charitable instincts of the public. The long-range survey of the entire social welfare situation in the District of Columbia urged by the majority seems very much in order.

Geography Derby

Anyone who has listened to quiz shows in which such items as refrigerators are given away for inconsequential bits of irrelevant information undoubtedly has developed a slight cynicism about the factual knowledge of the average American. There is nothing to dispel such cynicism in the latest Gallup Poll disclosures on knowledge of European geography. It is appalling to think, for instance, that at a time when we are attempting to preserve our dream of world order in Greece, only a third of the people can locate Greece on a map. Indeed, the highest percentage of accuracy found—72 per cent were able to point out England and France—is hardly anything to brag about. At the opposite end of the scale, only 13 per cent could identify Bulgaria. The breakdown by education shows a correlation between the amount of education and the percentage of accuracy, but even so only 64 per cent of persons with college training were able to locate Greece and only 41 per cent Hungary.

Inasmuch as we initiated this particular survey, we take especial interest in the areas of ignorance it reveals. Many reasons, of course, may be offered for the deficiencies uncovered. It probably would be unfair to assume that lack of precise geographical knowledge implies a corresponding ignorance of world affairs. Undoubtedly some persons have a general idea of European areas without being able to identify specific countries in their proper position. This is particularly true of such confusing regions as the Balkans, where boundary lines seldom have remained the same for more than a generation. Some of the explanation, we suspect, lies in the old practice of learning geography by rote in the manner of the old McGuffey Reader. It is difficult to revive such knowledge when there is no practical application to be served by it. Possibly, too, some of the reason lies in our traditional insularity which in the past led to a preoccupation with our own affairs to the exclusion of Europe—though a similar survey as to knowledge of the position of American States might prove equally startling.

Map knowledge alone, of course, is only an index. It can be extremely superficial unless it is related to the conditions that the maps represent. The really important factors of geography are not so much the ability to point to a certain capital as the understanding of each country in relation to its neighbors, and how terrain, raw materials, communications and trade apply in each sphere. Moreover there is danger, we believe, in too much stress on maps per se, especially on the old Mercator projection. Unless supplemented, this can lead to, for example, foolishly unrealistic ideas of the polar regions which today are assuming critical importance. Nevertheless, the lack of knowledge which the Gallup Poll shows up so graphically is a severe indictment of the efficacy of the manner in which geography has been taught in our schools. It also is an indictment of our media of information which, apparently, have failed to correlate places on the map with their significance in the day's news. If we wish to acquire genuine understanding of other peoples, and above all if we are to be equipped to vote intelligently and deal intelligently with international problems, this is a weak spot on which we should concentrate.

Rees Bill

Understandably, the members of the House of Representatives want to rid the Federal Government of all employes disloyal to the United States. The overwhelming vote, 319 to 61, by which they passed the Rees bill on Wednesday is testimony to their anxiety on this score. It seems to us that though this is a natural anxiety, it is rooted in the same subconscious fear that has led many people all over the country of late to see apparitions flying in the air. It is another expression of the psychological disturbance we have previously dubbed commiphobia. Sober minds surely cannot suppose that there are more than a few persons in the service of the United States—a very few—who are disloyal to this country in the sense that they would serve the interests of a foreign government. Yet this bill passed by the House would subject to suspicion 1,600,000 Federal employes.

The wonder of it is that an economy-minded House could adopt a program so egregiously extravagant. The Rees bill would require a name check—at a cost of $10 per person—of every one of the 1,600,000 without discrimination. Custodial employes, file clerks, stenographers, forest rangers, charwomen, researchers, statisticians and geologists—the overwhelming majority of whom could not possibly serve the interests of a foreign government even if they wished to do so—would all have to undergo the scrutiny of investigators. Then all those who had at any time joined an organization deemed subversive by the Attorney General or who had incurred the displeasure of the House Committee on Un-American Acitvities would have to undergo a still more extensive and expensive investigation by the FBI. And, finally, all those upon whose loyalty this investigation cast any doubt would be entitled to the ritual of a hearing before a newly created agency to be called a Loyalty Review Board.

This is as though the police of a city were to arrest and examine every resident on account of a suspicion that a criminal was at large. But there is no city where the police are so obtuse. They know where to look for criminals without harassing every reputable citizen—and without wasting the money and effort entailed in an indiscriminate roundup. The FBI, we think, is at least equally astute. If it were to devote its attention to the relatively few positions in the Government whose occupants could conceivably endanger security and confine its investigative energies to those persons concerning whom there was some basis for distrust, it could protect the country from alien agents far more effectively and economically than through spraying suspicion over the whole Federal roster.

The Rees bill is extravagant in another more serious respect as well. It would squander not only money but also a heritage of personal freedom which has been the peculiar glory of the Anglo-American political tradition. For the long-established presumption of individual innocence, it would substitute the doctrine of guilt by association. For the age-old right of an accused to confront his accuser, it would substitute the whisper of stool pigeons and informers. For the safeguard of judicial review, it would substitute the absolute fiat of an administrative tribunal. And for the careful constitutional protection against conviction for treason, it would substitute an easy yet scarcely less damaging stigmatization of disloyalty. It is a strange security that calls for such sacrifices.

Case of Lady Iris

Arrested on a charge of issuing worthless checks, Lady Iris Mountbatten reportedly said: "Of course I wrote them. I didn't think I was committing a crime. In England such matters are taken care of in the banks." This naive explanation might sound credible if Lady Iris had not known that her checks had been returned for nonpayment. For English banks permit their customers great latitude in drawing against nonexistent balances—a practice that used to be fairly prevalent in this country. But even in England the honoring of overdrafts is based on the belief that the drawer of the check is a trustworthy person who can be relied upon to make good the sums debited to his account. It seems much more probable that the titled visitor thought that her connections with British royalty would enable her to play the game of getting something for nothing without running foul of the law. No doubt those connections are responsible for withdrawal of the charge, following payment of the amounts due the Washington dress shop that received the worthless checks.

However, the troubles of Lady Iris are not over; her visitor's permit expired last February and an extension had been refused, because she had violated the terms of the permit by earning money while staying in this country. Her arrest has belatedly aroused the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, which has ordered her to leave the country by September 1. In our opinion, the bureau has been singularly remiss in not taking this action months ago. An official explanation of the reason for its delay is due the public. Otherwise it will be suspected of inefficiency, or worse, of favoritism in dealing with foreign visitors who fail to abide by Federal regulations.

The publicity given to the lawless activities of the British beauty whose photographs adorn a well known American chewing gum advertisement is evidence that the American people are still impressed by titles. It is a not unamiable weakness that foreign visitors have recognized and sometimes taken advantage of ever since the founding of the Republic. Unfortunately, it tempts weak and impecunious hangers-on of the socially elect to exploit their connections at our expense. Lady Iris is a comparatively insignificant member of this obnoxious class of chiselling foreigners. Her exposure should be a warning to others of her kind that the laws of this country are no respecter of persons, despite a certain indigenous social snobbishness that may mislead the strangers in our midst.

Patterson's Departure

The letter in which President Truman accepted the resignation of Secretary Patterson was a richly deserved tribute to a man who prosecuted the war with a rare devotion. It was always as if there were not enough hours in the day for Secretary Patterson. And out of every minute of his working time he extracted 60 seconds of service to his job. He felt there could never be enough contribution to the sustenance of the fighting forces. It was a total war in which everybody in his way was engaged, and sometimes we thought Mr. Patterson lacked a proper appreciation of the needs on the home front. But it was the knowledge of the military task confronting the generals that drove him remorselessly and single-mindedly to insist in their behalf upon the Army's requirements. He was the most compelling advocate in the councils of those who allocated the national resources. If in most cases he got what he wanted, however, it was not because of his presentation, but because he himself was the living exemplification of the sacrifice he pleaded for. A model of self-discipline, except when he was crossed as a claimant for the soldiers, a Spartan in his private habits—here was an administrator who behaved throughout the war as if he had a personal responsibility for winning it.

The sweetest praise in "Judge" Patterson's ears would be to call him a good soldier. In the First World War he was literally that, and he came back from the fronts with a chestful of medals, proof of his conspicuous gallantry and leadership in battle. But he was as good a soldier at his desk, first as Undersecretary and then as Secretary, as he was on the battlefield. Perhaps he had in his mind's eye the lot of the men in the foxholes and thought of himself as a comrade in arms. But we doubt it. We rather think his dedication to his work came from a pure patriotism—a patriotism unmarred by the slightest particle of selfish or political ambition. There were few men like him in wartime Washington. His absorption in the huge and many problems of his post, coupled with his dour personality, kept him somewhat aloof. Yet this man of war would have been at home in Athens as well as Sparta, for in private life he was a judge, and a judge rated by his fellows as one having authority and learning and wisdom. In the years to come we hope he will be rewarded by higher preferment on the bench

Shift Of Emphasis

In his first tax-bill veto message, as we pointed out at the time, the President made only passing reference to the budgetary problems resulting from our "great responsibilities for international relief and rehabilitation." He failed conspicuously to drive home the fact that the foreign-aid program might be jeopardized by reducing taxes before ascertaining the probable cost of that program. Since then the so-called Marshall Plan has assumed a more definite shape and the public has, we believe, acquired a better understanding of the reasons why it is essential for the United States to do its utmost to avert an economic collapse of western Europe that would have far-reaching political consequences as well. Russia's obstructionist attitude has also made the American public more receptive to appeals for support of an international program.

It seems probable, therefore, that the swiftly moving pace of events in recent weeks accounts in considerable part for a significant shift of emphasis in the second tax-veto message. While the later message merely reiterates the previously expressed objections to premature tax reduction, it stresses the importance of postponing tax reduction until "we are better able to estimate the cost of our investment in world peace and collective security." The boldness of the current approach contrasts strikingly with the earlier studied underplaying of the budgetary complications likely to result from reducing taxes in disregard of the unbudgeted costs of the foreign-aid program. The President has also buttressed his argument in favor of delayed action by stating that the "recent refusal of certain nations [meaning Russia] to join in common endeavors to establish conditions of world stability increases the difficulty of our task and exposes us to greater risk."

This is the kind of vigorous statement of the intimate connection between the Administration's foreign-aid program and the tax-reduction bill that we have been hoping for. We do not doubt that it is an argument that will reconcile many disappointed Americans to the postponement of tax relief who would not have been greatly impressed by other cogent objections set forth in both veto messages.

BUS RIDE

Daylight will follow you across three States at least
And sundown find you by a lake whose name you'll never know;
Cool wind from a thunder shower fallen just ahead of you will blow.

Between the sleep and waking, half-heard conversations fall,
But not the meaning of the words. Rain spots the glass;
Evening claims all with azure mist; a final gold upon the clouds will pass.

And thus the night; the lighted houses in strange fields
Diminish and give away to silent stars; the hours descend;
Your destination finds you in strange city: so your journeys all will end.

Depression Breeders

The Republican Congress has designed a 5-point plan for lasting depression in the price-control, tax, labor, rent and wool bills.

By prematurely removing price controls, the road to depression was opened as a dislocation in the supply-demand situation made real income gravitate to the investing class and away from consumers. Then, to pave the road to ruin with rationalization, the Congress argued that, since taxes are raised on a graduated basis, they should be reduced likewise. This, in the face of the removal of price controls which had already returned a disproportionate share of the national income to the "haves" while usurping the war savings and current earnings of the "have-nots."

These two measures in themselves were almost sufficient to successfully bring on a depression. But the tax bill was vetoed and there still was the uncontrolled labor variable. So, while the arch-engineers of freak legislation were being variously photographed in the press with victory grins of maniacal intensity, the Taft-Hartley bill was sent to the President and plans were being laid to resubmit the tax bill. Thus, while prices remained high, labor's efforts to obtain comparable wages could be blocked.

It is hard to explain the rent bill except as the product of a group of minds geared toward developing a depression. For, unlike the price control, tax and labor bills, the rent bill does not aid the rich and hurt the poor; it hurts everybody except the real estate owners. By taking away part of the consumers' dollar for rent (as a starter), his purchasing power would decline and he would have less to spend on manufactured products. This would result in curtailed production, increased unemployment, lower manufacturing profits, decreased reinvestment because of lower profits and shrinking markets. It would help "bust" the economy in a most adequate fashion.

But these measures are all domestic. We have an internationally minded Congress. These American leaders now realize that, in order for the free enterprise system to function, international trade is a basic essential. Therefore, the wool bill, which, unvetoed, would have been a wonderful step toward crushing free trade and would have given Russia's quest for European hegemony greater inspiration than the sound of "no" gives to Gromyko.

In addition to the master 5-point plan, little side efforts like undermining veterans and low-cost housing and practicing false economies, from slashing funds for Internal Revenue investigators to holding up appropriations for European construction, have contributed to the "Drang Noch Depression."

Capitol Police

Your editorial of July 14, "Attack on Mr. Bricker," regarding the inefficiency of the old men who sit dozing outside the doors of the congressional galleries was too apt to be dismissed quite so offhandedly as Mr. McGinnis would dismiss it.

Recently I attended a session of the Senate. As I sat in the gallery, I thought how easy it would be for an assassin to pick off his choice of Senators. Just to prove my theory, during a tedious discussion I drew my tobacco pouch from my pocket, held it in my right hand, and carefully sighted along the upper edge, drawing a bead on the bald pate of a Senator who was speaking with his back to me. No one in the gallery or elsewhere paid the slightest attention to me.

Incidentally, I was carrying a large envelope containing books and papers. It might easily also have contained a pistol, or even a hand grenade.

No, we certainly are not providing the security to which our Congressmen are entitled.

"Refugees As Workers"

As for accepting DP's in America, as discussed in your editorial of July 14, "Refugees as Workers," what would a half million people mean in our vast country? We could easily absorb them as the President has so eloquently said. But if these people, after being properly fed, can become able-bodied workers, with the establishment of the Marshall Plan to rebuild and revitalize Europe, won't they be greatly needed as workers there?

As for Britain's accepting these refugees, it just does not make sense, for I am reliably informed that Britons are leaving England for Africa at the approximate rate of 1000 to 2000 a week. Is it the old story? Less fortunate people will move into an unpromising economic situation, while more energetic ones move out. Is this good for England?

Right to Work

The Senate Labor Committee has approved a bill to increase the pay of GI's receiving on-the-job training. It is cruel for the Government to encourage young men to spend valuable years in getting on-the-job training as long as it permits labor unions to prevent such trainees from working after they are trained.

Congress should enact legislation providing that where a man has completed a course of training on-the-job at Government expense, he shall not be denied the right to work in his chosen trade or profession. If he has a job offered him in a union shop, the union should be compelled to permit him to join the union.

Marshall Plan

A writer for a weekly magazine recently wrote about a British diplomat whose car broke down near a village in a Russian satellite country. The village patriarch approached the Briton and said: "This is but a poor village, sir. But if you can arrange for our liberation from the Communists, we shall present you with 50 sheep and 50 goats."

Later a daily news commentator on international affairs tells us that, in the opinion of experienced observers, if Congress refuses the appropriations to implement the Marshall plan, all Europe will move with mathematical certainty into the Soviet sphere. This is the equivalent of asking us to believe that all Europeans are ignorant of the plight of the village patriarch and have never heard of the tyrannical performance of the Russian Communist Party, and that, therefore, all Europeans will abdicate their rational faculties and rush into the Russian political ice age if America is not willing to spend billions of dollars in Europe.

There is no question that the Marshall plan for aid to Europe is brilliant and well conceived. But it seems to this writer that terroristic propaganda will only stiffen American resistance to the Marshall plan and weaken its position. If Congress is rushed into signing a check without taking time to make prudent inquiry into how these fabulous American monies are to be spent in Europe, vast sums could be wastefully directed into financing gigantic, socialistic bureaucracies which bait the workers into supporting them by providing more vacations and short working hours, which work to the disastrous opposite of efficiency. No country in Europe is ever going to be rebuilt except by the energetic exercise of intelligent effort, work and more work.

Impending Crisis With Russia

I wonder if the people of the United States and Great Britain fully realize that events of the past few weeks have shown that a showdown between the Western Powers and Russia is getting closer. I would not be surprised if Secretary Marshall has already informed the Senate, in secret session, of this state of affairs. I know that Mr. Bevin, through many of his friends in the United States, had the information passed on to many leading men in Congress and the Administration. Such action by him would not have been made but for the seriousness of the present situation.

I have for long believed there has been a tendency in high places to belittle the Russian army and air force. Officials in the United States and Great Britain now see that such was an error, for they now know that the Russian army and air force are very much better than was commonly believed.

One reason is that the Russians now have the cream of German technicians working for them, and another is that a German volunteer army of 30 divisions, in Russian uniforms, under the command of Marshal von Paulus, is concentrated in eastern Siberia, facing Alaska. Also, millions of Russian troops are being intensively trained by German officers and NCO's. Further, von Paulus' best collaborator, Baron Vieth von Golssenau, alias Ludwig Renn, has recently spent considerable time in Mexico and was recently picked up by a Russian cargo vessel in a small isolated harbor, Cruz Salinas, and shipped back to Russia with much intelligence information concerning Mexico, Central America, etc.

All the above, coupled with the information coming from Europe, China and Korea, seem clearly to indicate that we might be at the beginning of a serious crisis. I do not mean to imply that war is to be expected this year, because I believe that the Russians will start trouble only after having constructed enough atom bombs, heavy water bombs and/or cosmic power bombs, which may not be the case before late 1948.

I have reason to believe that we might expect some very heavy Russian pressure in Austria before many weeks are over, for the numbers of Russian troops have increased recently and are now in excess of 200,000. This causes me to expect Russia to bring about either a partition of Austria or seizure of the whole zone. Only this week the Russian General Kurassov demanded the end of American inspection of eastern Austria, obviously because preparations are going on there which he does not want seen by United States authorities. All this could be Russia's way of threatening bloody revenge for Austria's participation in peace conferences.

I write this because I am a believer in the people being well and truly informed on all matters of such importance. A people well informed is better able to decide when a crisis arises.

"Columnar Collusion"

A Communication

MY ATTENTION has been called to an editorial in The Post of July 15, headed "Columnar Collusion." I am at a loss to understand how you could so completely miss the point of my criticism of the three columnists named in your editorial.

May I direct your attention to the Congressional Record of July 3, page 8361. In those remarks I tried to make clear that I was not criticizing the columnists for expressing their opinion or anyone else's opinion of the amendments to the Federal Power Act introduced by me on April 7 of this year, but I was criticizing them for publishing untrue statements given to them by some interested party when a few minutes' investigation would have proved the statements to be untrue.

I was critical of the column published by Lowell Mellett in which he said: "This week part of one day will be given to the Federal Power Commission at the urgent request of the Commission members who discovered at the eleventh hour what was going on." Also, in the column of Thomas L. Stokes I objected to this language: "Perhaps the most brazen phase of this sneak offensive is the hurry-up attempt this week to slip through the House Interstate Commerce Committee, and eventually through Congress, two bills that virtually would nullify the Federal Power Commission's regulatory authority." Also in Marquis Childs' column, the following: "This is the maneuver the power companies are now undertaking through an innocent-sounding bill which thus far has almost entirely escaped attention."

ALL THREE of these columnists should have known that there was no attempt on the part of anyone to sneak these bills through a committee of Congress. The facts are a matter of record.

The bills were introduced on April 7 of this year. A few days later the clerk of the Interstate Commerce Committee sent copies of the bills to the Federal Power Commission, requesting its report on the suggested amendments. Those reports were filed by the FPC with the Committee on Interstate Commerce on June 13. The initial hearings were scheduled for June 23 and 24 and ample notice was given to the Federal Power Commission. In addition, the hearings were listed in the Congressional Record on three different days.

Representatives of the Federal Power Commission have stated that the amendments under consideration would remove 75 per cent of the public utilities now under their control from future jurisdiction. They certainly have not as yet proved any such statement. In fact just about every member of the subcommittee, myself included, has stated on more than one occasion that if the bills went half as far as representatives of the FPC say they will go, they should be defeated.

I HAVE no quarrel with any columnist who expresses a critical opinion of any act of mine. If after reading the bills any columnist wants to conclude that I am "a dumb tool of the power trust," he is certainly entitled to that opinion.

You raised the question in your editorial as to why I ignored an article which appeared in the Washington Daily News under the by-line of Miss Ruth Finney and in the same edition of that paper an editorial entitled "Don't Let Utilities Backslide." I did not include Miss Finney's article for the reason that she did no more than report the testimony of the members of the Federal Power Commission. She did not make any charge of attempting to sneak legislation through the Congress. The editorial I had not seen.

I cannot at the moment think of any way in which I could have directed attention to the proposed amendments that was not utilized. I took part in a 30-minute network broadcast with Mr. Nelson Lee Smith, chairman of the Federal Power Commission. I discussed the amendments I had introduced, on three different occasions on the floor of the House, on one occasion taking about an hour's time. In addition, the press gallery and the radio gallery of the House of Representatives were provided with summaries of each witness' testimony presented to the committee conducting the hearings.

In view of that record can you see any justification for the charge that it was only accidental that the FPC learned of the amendments? I have stated previously and I repeat to you that all I am trying to do, and all I believe the amendments I have introduced will do, is to compel the FPC to limit its activities to what Congress intended it to do when it passed the 1935 amendments.

WILLIAM J. MILLER,
Representative From Connecticut.
Washington.

Editor's Note: We think we by no means missed the point of Mr. Miller's criticism. His remarks in the House went far beyond criticizing the three columns for their common allegation that his bills had received inadequate consideration. In point of fact, although we made no reference to it in our editorial, we think there was much substance to this allegation. Two days is very little time to devote to hearings on measures which would overthrow a power policy long established—and established as the result of weeks of hearings and deliberation. If Mr. Miller cannot, as he says, "think of any way in which I could have directed attention to the proposed amendments that was not utilized," we can suggest to him one elementary and excellent way—that is to invite the testimony of men outstanding in the field of public power development and regulation.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Atom Leak Was Almost a Flood

By Drew Pearson

ATTORNEY General Tom Clark and J. Edgar Hoover have given some quiet study to the prosecution of atomic information thefts and find it is going to be easier than during the war.

During the war, a hitherto unpublished incident took place when Maj. Gen. Leslie R. Groves demanded that Clark prosecute a western Pennsylvania radio commentator who had inadvertently leaked some atomic information. If the Army at that time had had its way, the whole atomic bomb secret might have been spilled.

The incident occurred about eight months before VJ-Day when the commentator, who had a considerable knowledge of physics, innocently speculated on the possibility of developing an atomic weapon. Groves rushed to Clark, then Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Justice Department's Criminal Division, and demanded that the radio man be clapped in jail.

Clark asked the general if he was prepared to show in open court that the broadcaster had violated censorship, thereby advertising to the world that the Government was working on the atomic bomb.

"Then hold the trial in secret," demanded Groves.

Clark replied that the United States did not hold trials in secret. Furthermore he pointed out the Pennsylvania broadcast was heard only locally but would be made known to the general public through a trial. Finally Groves subsided.

Note—On the other hand, the Justice Department did decide to prosecute the Chicago Tribune, at the request of the Navy, for publishing a story which gave away the priceless secret that the Navy was decoding Japanese messages. In the middle of the grand jury session, however, the Navy refused to permit this fact to be presented as evidence and the case petered out.

Apologies to Webster

USUALLY, Indiana's stodgy Homer Capehart chooses his words carefully on the Senate floor. But he slipped the other day in a dispute over tax figures. Referring to a table placed in the record by handsome Spessard Holland of Florida, Capehart demanded:

"What sort of finagling do those figures represent?"

Replied Wyoming's Joe O'Mahoney: "I say to the Senator from Florida that the Senator from Indiana has used the elegant language of 'finagling' when his attention was called to the table put into the record by the able Senator from Florida."

Red-faced, Capehart quickly retracted: "I apologize for using the term 'finagling.'"

"The Senator knows what the expression means, I take it," interrupted Scott Lucas of Illinois.

"I resent that," snapped Capehart. "The remark of the able Senator from Illinois, just made, is typical of the Senator from Illinois, and no one is any better qualified to make such a remark than he is."

Brief Recession Unlikely

SENATOR Taft was advised last week by Dr. John Clark of the President's Council of Economic Advisers that it would be very shortsighted to anticipate "a brief and moderate recession." If there is a decline in the near future, Clark wrote Taft, it will be anything but "brief and moderate."

The warning went to Taft in his capacity as chairman of the Joint Economic Committee.

Frequent comparisons of the present situation with that following the first World War are erroneous, Clark said. But even if they were correct, it is wrong to hold that the recession of 1922 was of minor importance.

"Industrial production, industrial employment and national income all dropped about 30 per cent," the economic adviser informed Taft, "and we all know what happened to the farmer."

Recovery then was rapid, except in agriculture, Clark continued. "But economic changes which were a major factor in that early recovery and which those who are complacent about another 'moderate recession' would welcome, may not rescue us this time.

"The reduction in prices and costs will now be impeded by important modifications in our economic structure. The area of administered prices, about which there now seems to be none of the debate which raged a few years ago, is very much greater than in 1920, and the very definition of an administered-price industry includes the feature that, when business drops off, the producer reduces production and employment and does not reduce prices to the extent prices are reduced in a truly competitive business.

"Prices of farm products will not drop as in 1920-21 because the Congress has ordered that they be supported," Clark advised. "The price which we call wages will be far more rigid because the ranks of organized labor, which will always resist wage reductions, include 10 million more workers whose power in bargaining on wage changes has been fortified by legislation unknown a generation ago.

"The great danger in the easy optimism about a 'moderate recession' lies in its tendency to create a reluctance on the part of the people and of their representatives to institute public policies which are uncomfortable but which are needed to forestall the forces which threaten our continued prosperity. We know they will accept—nay, even, they will demand—Government action of far more serious import if we suffer a depression.

"But it would be folly to let matters take their course in the expectation that if business turns downward it will be only a mild and short affair, or that if it grows into a depression we will then take care of it.

"We will take care if it," concluded Clark. "We will have to do so. But the task would be very difficult as compared with our present problem of maintaining a high level of production and employment before the sustaining forces have begun to weaken."

Under the Dome

JAMES FARRELL'S "Studs Lonigan" has been barred by the Army from publication in Germany. Though the book was one of the few which American prisoners in Germany were not allowed to read because it was so anti-Nazi, the Army now says it shouldn't be read by the German people . . . Admiral Chester W. Nimitz will definitely retire as chief of naval operations in December. He and Mrs. Nimitz will then live in Berkeley, Calif. . . . When Gen. Thomas B. Larkin, efficient Army Quartermaster, urged the American Petroleum Institute to be ready for a national emergency, one big oil man snorted: "It's the extravagant use of supplies by the Army and Navy that is causing much of our oil shortage today." Nevertheless, the petroleum industry formed a committee to study the Army's recommendations . . . Oil men say one cause of the threatened oil shortage is lack of steel needed for drilling tools. Another reason is the increased use of tractors on farms. This has doubled since before the war.

WATCH OUT, ICARUS, YOU'LL SINGE YOUR FEATHERS
. . . Carlisle, in the Des Moines Register and Tribune

Gift Horse's Mouth

THE bituminous coal settlement is one of those gestures of defiance for which the soft coal industry, the United Mine Workers and John L. Lewis are famous. According to the newspaper reports, Mr. Lewis did not ask the operators for a contract. "We told them," Mr. Lewis said, "that our people are out of work, that the Government had discharged us and we were looking for employment." So in the coal industry collective bargaining has reached the most advanced stage of development.

The reported increase in wages of 44 and a fraction cents an hour, or about 37 per cent above existing hourly rates, means a substantial increase in coal costs and prices and in the costs of large consumers of coal. Except at the peak of the boom this is bound to put coal at a competitive disadvantage, continue the process of the replacement of coal by other fuels which strikes and the peculiar bargaining practiced in this industry had started a good many years ago, and reduce the long-term volume of employment.

These advances in costs and prices come at a time when the clamor for price reductions, which awhile ago were considered the essential basis of continued prosperity, is not quite forgotten.

The Purchase of Peace

FOR the coal operators and steel operators the arrangements with Mr. Lewis mean another breathing spell during which coal and steel will continue to be produced. They were the means of purchasing labor peace for another period of the business boom in which this country finds itself.

It cannot have been a matter of indifference to the coal and steel industries whether they settled for an increase of 15 cents an hour, which was the concession most generally made in industry, or for 44 cents, which is the amount which has now been granted to the coal miners. For if the rates conceded to the coal miners do not matter, then American industry will have to reconsider the principles of wage determination which it has traditionally supported and discover some new ones.

The Wholesale Approach

THE fact is that the trends of labor negotiation in the coal industry are the inevitable result of 100 per cent unionism and the substance, if not the form, of industry-wide bargaining.

In the evolution of this type of relationship, it is to be expected that what the operators today may surrender grudgingly they will in time grant willingly. It is also to be anticipated that where it is so easy to shut down an industry in its entirety the conditions exacted for keeping it going are likely to be extreme and onerous. Whatever settlements come out of such relations, they will in all probability show little concern with the needs of particular employers or regions and pay little heed to the public interest.

With such matters the Taft-Hartley Act does not deal. The legal immunities which Mr. Lewis and the miners' union profess to have won through language in the new contract are unimportant next to the great powers which the union possesses so long as the questions of union monopoly and joint employer-union monopoly are unsettled in the law. The proper settlement of these questions raises profound issues of public policy. Those issues are only hinted at in our latest Federal labor statute.

Matter of Fact

Dewey Cloud Looms in Far East

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

IN the course of his gloriously phony "vacation" tour of the ranges where the delegates pasture, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey has made considerable progress, without exactly stampeding any large herds of the desirable and useful animals he has been hunting. He is far and away ahead in the contest for the Republican presidential nomination. Yet it is still worth noting one or two risks he has still to run before he can build up his own delegate-herd to the point of undoubted victory.

First and least important, there are plenty of signs on Capitol Hill today that such Senators as Kem of Missouri, and a good many influential Representatives, do not enjoy having the political livestock back home auctioned by others while they are away in the big city. This was of course inevitable, despite the great care that Dewey's staff took to clear his visit to each State with all its absent potentates.

A much more serious threat may be discerned in the direction of Tokyo, where General MacArthur reigns in power that would have been envied by any Mikado in history. The irritation of local potentates, above noted, will naturally assist the Stop-Dewey movement which the supporters of Senator Taft are now almost openly touting. But the cooperation of MacArthur would give such a move the kind of solidity and substance it now rather markedly lacks. And MacArthur has been saying some rather odd things lately to visitors who have eagerly reported his words in Washington.

A Sop for Greene

TO one such visitor, for example, he indicated considerable sympathy for the Taft candidacy, remarking that Senator Vandenberg ought to have backed Taft in 1940 instead of supporting MacArthur as an alternative. An earlier visitor returned to the Taft camp from Tokyo with an ostensible message to the effect that MacArthur was for Taft, and that although his own job was in the Far East he was not averse to helping Taft in any way he could.

These reports must of course be given a substantial discount, like all such reports on political matters even when first hand. Yet they have a special interest, if taken in conjunction with the recent behavior of the grand panjandrum of extreme Republican conservatism, Col. Robert R. McCormick of Chicago.

Colonel McCormick and Governor Greene are the joint satraps of Illinois. Until recently, McCormick's newspaper had beat its blatant drum for MacArthur for President, first, last and always. Meanwhile Greene gave signs of hankering for favorite son recognition. Now a less uncompromising note has crept into the Chicago Tribune editorial pages. McCormick is now for MacArthur first and Taft second.

There is also some reason to believe that the distinguished Governor of Illinois might be tempted to sink his claims to recognition at the convention, by the promise of a more substantial reward. The Secretaryship of National Security is said, in fact, to seem decidedly attractive to him.

Wrapped for Delivery

PUT these scraps of evidence together and it begins to seem at least conceivable that MacArthur will return from Tokyo some time during the next year, for a sort of imperial tour of the United States. The imperial tour will be employed as the stimulus for a "spontaneous" MacArthur for President movement. A MacArthur delegation will be formed in Illinois. Delegates will be sought in other States where MacArthur has appeal, such as Wisconsin. And these MacArthur delegations, by careful prearrangement, will go to Taft on the second ballot, counterbalancing Dewey's inevitable second ballot gain.

It is the kind of political stratagem which has not been unheard of in the American past, and has worked before. It needs only MacArthur's cooperation to be tried this time, since it is obvious that the Taft camp would be delighted and that McCormick actually has something of the sort in mind. Whether MacArthur will in the end cooperate is, of course, a very open question. And since the American past was very different from the American present, it still remains to be seen whether this sort of stunt can be worked successfully under modern conditions.

The nature of the problem is reasonably obvious. If the stunt is tried, McCormick will emerge as a leading Taftite. That will place upon Senator Taft and his followers, however little they deserve it and however much they desire to avoid it, the mark of standard bearers of the extreme Republican right wing. It will, conversely, place upon Dewey, much more clearly than at present while Dewey is still so wonderfully mum, the mark of standard bearer of the relatively progressive Republicans.

At the same time, it will enormously intensify the struggle that has so long been in progress between the Midwestern Republican organizations, which have hardly altered since the time of Herbert Hoover, and the West and East Coast Republicans, who have been modernized by repeated defeats. In the old days, all this would merely have contributed to the complex pleasures of politics. But at present, since these struggles must also affect congressional decisions upon the destiny of the United States, this sort of thing is a trifle alarming.

America's I.Q. Is O.K., Says Educator

Our 'Dimming' Wits Defended

By Robert E. Geiger

POPULATION experts have discovered a possibility that the intelligence of the American people is declining.

Guy Irving Burch of the Population Reference Bureau, a private research organization, says the most alarming threat to intelligence is the pattern of human reproduction. He quotes Census Bureau figures to show that parents with the least mental and financial ability produce twice as many children as parents of higher intelligence and income.

DR. FRANCIS BROWN, staff associate of the American Council of Education and the executive secretary of the President's Commission, says he agrees with Burch that under present conditions average American intelligence seems to be declining. But he says "this population - intelligence report does not give enough importance to the possibility of improving intelligence by education.

"It emphasizes the part heredity plays in human intelligence. It implies that, because of the law of heredity, in the majority of cases a child will have about the same level of intelligence as his parents. And it also implies that because children are more numerous in the poorer families the average of intelligence is dropping to the danger point.

"What it overlooks is this: Human intelligence never has been developed to its fullest among the great masses of people. No way has been found accurately to measure the ultimate capabilities of the human mind.

"There are certain physical, emotional and intellectual capacities that are limited by native intelligence, which is the capacity of the mind to learn and create. These capacities may be limited by heredity.

"But what happens in developing these inborn abilities determines the level of intelligence a person will reach.

"And at the present time we have no method of exactly measuring these inborn abilities.

"All indications are that there is a tremendous reserve of human intelligence that never has been developed."

BURCH agrees that there are no means of accurately measuring inborn intelligence. But he says four of the most reliable guides are psychological tests, educational attainment, the type of occupation to which a person is attracted and the success he achieves.

"Regardless of which test we study, we reach the general conclusion that the lowest third of our people in each one of these categories has about twice as large families as the highest third," he says.

He summarizes the results of some recent intelligence investigations made by American educators and says that if these limited tests hold true for the whole Nation, one third of the American people "are no better intellectually than dull or backward."

Forty per cent have "normal" intelligence.

Twenty-seven per cent have superior intelligence.

"But if the large families in the low ranges of scholarly achievement are causing our average intelligence to decline at the rate of two I.Q. points ("intelligence quotient" measurement used in intelligence tests) in every generation, it would not take more than a few decades before the majority of the American people would have no higher I.Q. than the dull and backward."

He says a sectional survey showed that children rated from "idiots and imbeciles" upward to "dull and backward" come from familes averaging 5.1 children, "normal" children from families families averaging 5.1 children, children rated from "superior" to "genius" come from families averaging 3.2 children.

He says this situation will have to be reversed, through birth control or in some other way, so that people of the upper brackets produce at least an equal number of children as those in the low brackets of intelligence.

No Excuse for Indecision on UMT

WE know now that this session of Congress will do nothing about universal military training. But we know also that mere inaction is not an answer to the problem. It is not even an affirmative expression of judgment; it is a putting off of judgment.

If many members of Congress find it difficult to arrive at a judgment, how much more so does the ordinary citizen. About universal military training, as about a score of other issues important and disquieting, the citizen hears contending voices, receives fragments of information by press and radio. But he is baffled by the impossibility of piecing all these together and forming a judgment of his own.

The more sensible and conscientious the citizen, the more he is disquieted by the difficulty, the practical impossibility, of arriving at a decision for himself. This recognition by average citizens that they do not know the answers is at once wholesome yet disquieting.

So-called public opinion polls undertake to say, in exact figures and percentages, what is the judgment of the American people about issues so complex that they baffle experts. In these polls one is impressed by the proportion of the persons polled who answer, "don't know."

The proportion who thus candidly affirm their inability to have confident conclusions tends to increase, so I recall from casual observation of polls, and I hope I am right. They may contribute more to accurate pictures of American thought than the larger numbers who, responding to questions that frustrate experts, answer confidently, "yes" or "no."

Truman Got Answer

MANY persons must wish occasionally that there were some way of bringing about dependable judgments, some process that would at once include completeness of information, sound thought and freedom from self-interest or bias. This has been attempted in the case of universal military training.

President Truman — possibly baffled as much as ordinary citizens are, but under official obligation to have a judgment and take a position on it—appointed an Advisory Commission on Universal Military Training.

As chairman of the commission Mr. Truman named one of the country's most distinguished scientists, Dr. Karl T. Compton of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Considering the place the atomic bomb has in the military problem, selection of a chairman from the field of science has convincing weight.

Other members are high in important fields: Harold W. Dodds, president of Princeton University;; the Rev. Thomas A. Walsh, S. J., vice president of Georgetown University; Charles E. Wilson, president of General Electric; Joseph E. Davies, former Ambassador to Russia; Samuel I. Rosenman, who was an intimate adviser to President Roosevelt; Dr. Daniel Poling, editor of The Christian Herald.

The judgment of such a group, considering their official responsibility and the study they put upon the problem, might reasonably be accepted by average citizens, and in many cases no doubt was. But the crowding of many issues and exciting events arising out of them may have deprived many persons of thoughtful reading of the commission's report.

Substance of Fantasy

THE report was unanimous on all points. In a single austere sentence it set down what may be accepted as the final word about the nature of any future war: "It is entirely possible that the first day of the attack would result in the crippling or destruction of a dozen of our largest cities, the elimination of our most essential production facilities."

If any have supposed that much of the talk about the nature of a future war sounds like the comic strip fantasies of Superman and Buck Rogers, they will be sobered to read in this report about placing strategic factories underground, "sheltered with great thicknesses of concrete, lead, or protective material."

The report spoke of universal military training as an "urgent military necessity," and said, "We have no desire to sugarcoat this fact." Any attempt to avoid facing the issues raised by proposed military training would be, the report said, "an invitation to disaster."

The commission's specific recommendations were for six months' basic training for all young men upon reaching the age of 18, and either an additional six months of advanced training or special study in college courses approved by the armed services; the entire program of training to be controlled by a three-member board, two civilians and one from the armed services.

Allowing for differences about details of training, any citizen or member of Congress seeking to make up his mind about the basic issue would have difficulty in finding a more authoritative or in any respect better source of judgment than this report by President Truman's commission. The possibility which this report aims to guard against is not diminished by the course the world is taking before our eyes.

Geography 'Exam'

from Europe, with little or no travel there by average Americans. It seems likely that durthe next generation, with world cooperation the keynote, Americans will come to have a much better conception of European geography.

2. Lack of knowledge about the exact location of some countries does not necessarily mean that Americans have no grasp of the broad problems facing Europe or no right to express an opinion on those problems. Precise details are certainly desirable in the forming of opinions. But the fact that a man may not have quiz-type information about geography or some other subject at his finger tips does not necessarily prevent him from reaching common-sense judgments.

To take a rough analogy, many people in the United States do not know the number of justices on the Supreme Court, but that did not prevent them from expressing perfectly valid convictions in 1937 about whether President Roosevelt's plan to curb the power of the court was desirable or undesirable.

3. While a low proportion in the survey was able to identify correctly such countries as Yugoslavia, Romania and Bulgaria, many placed them in the right general area, indicating a familiarity with the broad outlines of European geography if not with the specific national boundaries.

4. The survey indicates that there is considerable need for more effective teaching of geography in American primary and secondary schools.

Men's Margin Slight

THE results of the map test by education levels show wide differences. The following table gives the percentage correctly identifying the various countries.

P. C. Giving Correct Answers

	College Training	High School Only	Grade School or No School
England	86%	80%	51%
Italy	92	82	50
France	87	68	45
Spain	84	65	38
Poland	63	45	21
Holland	63	43	17
Greece	64	35	13
Czechoslovakia	41	28	13
Yugoslavia	41	21	12
Hungary	32	19	11
Romania	31	17	7
Bulgaria	26	12	5

Another method of scoring the test is the number of countries which any one group correctly identified. It works out this way:

The average college trained person in the survey was able to get 7 out of the 12 countries. Those with only high school training got 6 out of the 12 right on the average, while those with grade school only or no school got 3 right. The average for men was 6 out of 12, for women 5. The average for everybody was 5 out of 12.

Printer Walkout Halts Marriages

COPENHAGEN (AP). — The recent death of King Christian X, and a strike of printers in Denmark, made it almost impossible for Danes to get married or divorced for several weeks. The proper legal forms were not available.

A young couple obtained a special marriage license, but before going to the altar the bridegroom presented it to the clergyman. When the latter noticed that it carried the initials of the dead monarch instead of those of King Frederick IX, he was unable to proceed with the ceremony.

Licenses bearing the new ruler's name could not be obtained because of the printers' strike. A similar shortage prevailed in divorce forms.

Peron's Draftees Get $7.50 a Month

Buenos Aires (AP). — Conscripts serving their compulsory military service here have gotten a raise—from $2.50 to $7.50 per month. Furthermore, foreign military men say they get the best food of any army in the world.

The raises were given in recent general salary increases for the armed forces. Conscripts — all youths have to serve a year in the army—get raised to about $27.50 a month if they reenlist as volunteers.

A Prosperous Liberia Marks Centenary as An African Republic

By Lester A. Walton
Former Minister to Liberia
Written Especially for the Associated Press

AMERICA'S only experiment at overseas colonization is 100 years old. Liberia, the Negro republic on the west coast of Africa, will celebrate its centenary at Monrovia, the capital, from July 24 to August 14.

It was in 1847 that a constitutional convention was convened, and after a month's deliberation a declaration of independence was promulgated. Liberia is one of two independent states on a continent of colonies, Ethiopia being the other. It is the only country in Africa with a republican form of government.

Wide World Photo
WILLIAM V. S. TUBMAN ... Liberia's president

Liberia is a charter member of the United Nations and was a member of the League of Nations. It was an important Allied air base in the recent war and bids fair to become a valuable link in world commercial aviation.

Liberia sometimes has been referred to as a "ward" or "stepchild" of the United States. "Protectorate" is another term, but one to which the Liberians take emphatic exception although there can be no denying that American financial, moral and political support have contributed appreciably to its progress and stability.

Jefferson Project

TOWARD the close of the Eighteenth Century the United States was confronted with a major problem growing out of the increasing number of freed slaves. Thomas Jefferson and other sympathizers concluded that a solution would be the establishment of colonies in Africa.

It was under the aegis of the American Colonization Society, still in existence with headquarters at Washington, and with the moral and financial assistance of the United States, that this unique experiment was undertaken. Elijah Caldwell, clerk of the Supreme Court, and the Rev. Robert Finley, a Presbyterian minister, were among the prime-movers. Others interested in the project were Judge Bushrod Washington, brother of George Washington; Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, Senator John Randolph of Virginia and Francis Scott Key.

In 1817 the society sent an expedition to Africa to look for a site. Two years later Congress appropriated $100,000 "for the keep and deportation of liberated Negroes."

In 1820 the first group of colonists sailed. The second contingent sailed in 1821. Much could be written of their tribulations in the first months. It was necessary to move from Bushod Island to Providence Island because of the hostility of the aborigines. Wild beasts, disease and inclement weather were other problems.

The formation of colonization societies in New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Mississippi stimulated the voluntary immigration of Freedmen to Africa. Between 1822 aand 1828 Liberia became a commonwealth. Monrovia, the capital, was named for President Monroe.

Finances Are Sound

BOUNDARY disputes, controversies between Liberia and European colonial powers over the commonwealth's status, and clashes with slave traders were reasons for Liberia declaring its independence.

Until 1936 Liberia was beset by financial difficulties. Foreign loans helped little as much of the money was used to pay off previous loans. But since 1936 Liberia has balanced its budget annually. Its finances now are in the healthiest condition in its history.

The African republic benefited materially from World War II. The presence of American troops and of health, economic, educational, agricultural and other missions did much to increase its prosperity.

Employment of hundreds of Liberians on the 15-million-dollar port project at Monrovia, financed by the United States, has been another factor. In 1942 the pound sterling was supplanted by the dollar as Liberia's legal medium of exchange.

Liberia also has benefited from the rubber cultivation program of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co., which has the world's largest rubber plantation in Liberia, with a payroll of 22,000 Liberiams. Liberia was one of the three countries to export rubber to the Allies during the war.

Broke Off Relations

IN 1930 an international commission reported to the League of Nations the existence in Liberia of a system of pawning men, women and children, and that captives of tribal wars were held in bondage. The commission found no evidence of slave-holding or slave-trading as known in the United States. The United States and Britain severed diplomatic relations with Liberia, which was advised "to put your house in order."

Liberia's unwillingness to accept the plan of assistance formulated by the League of Nations in 1934 resulted in President Edwin Barclay's launching his own reforms. The United States renewed relations in June, 1935, and I was appointed Minister by President Roosevelt in July. Late in 1936, Britain took favorable diplomatic action. The Barclay plan went into effect at the beginning of 1936.

Up to 1935, four-fifths of the money expended for education was under the auspices of American philanthropy. Increasing revenues now make it possible for the government to appropriate much larger sums toward the operation of schools and colleges.

Americans, through church mission boards, continue to send thousands of dollars annually for education in Liberia. Institutions of learning are maintained by the Episcopalians, Methodists, Catholics, Lutherans, A. M. E. and A. M. E. Zion churches, Seventh-Day Adventists and the Assembly of God.

The Phelps-Stokes Fund also has been active for many years in contributing to the educational development of the country.

The Republic of Liberia is about the size of Ohio. Its population is estimated at between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000, of which more than two-thirds are aborigines.

President William V. S. Tubman has extended invitations to prominent white and Negro Americans to attend the centenary celebration.

Australian Planes Cheaper Than Cars

Melbourne (AP). — Airplanes are cheaper to buy in Australia than new automobiles—and a whole lot easier.

Twenty Lockheed-Hudson bombers have been put up for sale by the Commonwealth Disposals Commission for $3240 each, which is less than the price of a new de luxe American or British auto.

'Experimenters' Swap Hearthsides

'Heap o' Livin'' Teaches World Brotherhood

By Suzanne Macpherson

FOR 15 years a small, nonprofit educational group, known as the Experiment in Living, Inc., has been demonstrating that understanding between different nationalities can be successfully taught. The founder and director, Donald B. Watt, who makes his headquarters at Putney, Vt., has brought an estimated 10,000 persons of 20 nationalities together since 1932.

Watt maintains that laws and speeches cannot create world citizens, that "people only learn to live together by living together." He is a former personnel director at Syracuse University.

Unlike the usual student tour abroad, the Experiment recognizes the family as the basic unit of world community. It educates young people in internationalism by placing them in one another's homes. Experimenters go abroad not as sightseers but as members of families whose lives they share closely for a summer.

The families in each country are chosen by resident representatives and the students—not only Americans, but also the French, Guatemalans and Mexicans coming to the United States this year—are accompanied by adult leaders well acquainted with the land they visit.

Sophie Finkenstaedt is living with a Swedish family this summer, was guest in a Mexican home last year, and the past two Christmases she has entertained Mexicans at her Georgetown home

Rugged Breaking In

THE FAMILIES which receive Experimenters are "briefed" in proved methods of adjustment. For instance, Watt reminds Americans that our Latin neighbors are not the clock watchers we are, but have many virtues other than punctuality. One of them is the desire to please. Last winter 27 Mexican boys and girls who visited in Washington astonished their American friends by showing how efficiently they could wash dishes, while at home in Mexico work in the kitchen would have been unthinkable.

American Experimenters are as adaptable as anyone; yet the first group to visit France in 1934 shocked an entire provincial town and was a failure on the evening of its arrival because an American boy and girl took a walk together unchaperoned. The group learned rapidly from that faux pas, and their adopted families stood weeping in the railroad station when the summer was over.

Most Experimenters agree that the first few days in a new family are "pretty rugged." No matter how many years the visitor may have studied the language, he is usually speechless the first day, overwhelmed by hospitality, new customs and foods and laughter at his mistakes. Watt always cautions the hosts: "Please let your guest go to bed early; he will be exhausted from trying to understand you."

$600 Average Cost

EXPERIMENTERS travel as cheaply as possible—on third-class trains, bicycles and often on foot with packs on their backs. The 120 American Experimenters who sailed for France and Scandinavia last month aboard semiconverted troop ships authorized by the State Department for student travel to Europe, slept 34 or more to a cabin and stood in chow lines with mess kits.

Reduced rates for student travel have helped, but the average cost for an Experimenter this summer was still close to $600, about $100 more than before the war. All, except for five scholarship students, paid their own way. The Experiment hopes some day to have at least half its members on scholarships.

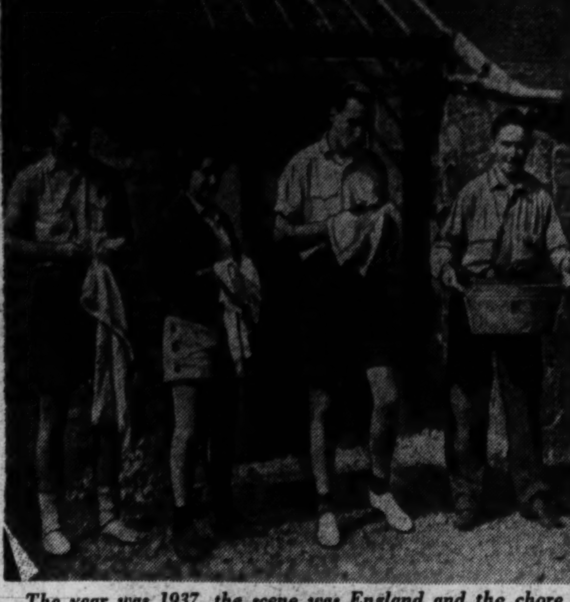
To correct the European delusion that all Americans are made of money, Watt requests students not to take more than $50 spending money and a minimum of baggage. Economy does not apply to relief work, however. The 90 American Experimenters working as counselors this summer in the French camping program for 700,000 children, have distributed nearly 10 tons of food, clothing, medicine and camping equipment.

Hosts may charge a small fee for room and board, but most prefer not to. This summer 25 American families are opening their doors to French university boys who have offered return hospitality in their own homes next summer.

Mexico to Sweden

A WASHINGTON Experimenter who has been both guest and host for two years is Sophie Finkenstaedt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Finkenstaedt of 3028 N st. nw. Miss Finkenstaedt, who will be graduated next year from Briarcliff Junior College, is presently living with a Swedish family near Stockholm. She spent last summer in Mexico, and she and her parents have entertained Mexican Experimenters in their Georgetown home the past two Christmases. Next summer they hope to have a Swedish "sister."

Another Washingtonian is A. Buel Trowbridge of 4331 Garfield st. nw., now working for his doctorate in international affairs at American University. Trowbridge, who led groups for five summers in Europe, is chairman of the Experiment's sizable Washington alumni group.



The year was 1937, the scene was England and the chore was dish-washing when this snapshot was taken. The Experimenters pictured are, left to right: H. Van Buren Cleveland, now assistant chief of the State Department's Division of Economic Development; Janet Austrian, now a Federal Reserve researcher; Harlan Cleveland, now in China for UNRRA, and Robert Austrian, a Johns Hopkins doctor today

He points out the number of Washington Experimenters who have entered Government and international fields. Among them are Francis Sayvre, United States representative in Western Samoa for the U. N. trusteeship council; Olcott H. Deming, executive secretary of the State Department's Interdepartmental Committee for Scientific and Cultural Cooperation; Francis Russell, information director for the State Department's Office of Public Affairs; H. Van Buren Cleveland, assistant chief of the State Department's Division of Investment and Economic Development; Harlan Cleveland, chief of an UNRRA mission in China; Miss Marion Neustadt of the Division of Foreign Service Planning and F. Gardner Cox., jr., of the State Department's Office of International Information and Cultural Affairs.

Cox says he works for the "Voice of America" mainly because he saw first-hand the tragic results of twisted information or no information at all when he lived in Germany as an Experimenter in 1935.

Antidote Was Felt

BEFORE the war, during the rise of Nazism, 304 American experimenters lived most successfully in German and Austrian homes. Their impact on Germans poisoned by propaganda was keenly felt by many liberal German educators. One of them, an Experiment representative in the university town of Freiburg and an anti-Nazi from the beginning, wrote his American friends last year:

"Would God the Experiment had gained more ground and laid hold on more families. Then perhaps this catastrophe of humanity would not have come; then the criminal fanaticism and Nazism would not have attained mastery. But now we are provisionally an outlawed race, and it will be a long time before this blot is removed from us. We can only work, hope and wait for you to come again."

Italy Sends Half Of Pampas Influx

BUENOS AIRES (AP).—Italian immigrants coming to Argentina will find themselves at home. Nearly half the immigrants in the past 90 years have been Italian.

They were the largest single group—2,977,208 out of the total of 6,802,265 since 1857 when Argentina first began to encourage immigration. Spaniards, totaling 2,094,992, were in second place. The other sources of immigrants, in descending order, were:

French, 243,227; Poles, 182,755; Russians, 179,176; Germans, 158,816; miscellaneous, 966,091.

More than four million of the nearly seven million immigrants came between 1900 and 1930 when the flood was reduced.

Air-Sickness Hits Children Hardest

Melbourne (AP).—A survey of air-sickness among 11,218 passengers on Australian air routes revealed men suffered less than women or children.

Medical officer of the government-operated Trans-Australia Airlines, Dr. F. S. Parle, announced his survey showed 16 in every 1000 passengers suffered from air-sickness. Rate of air-sickness was highest in chil-

Library Guides Nation's Blind To New 'Vision'

By Fred M. Hechinger

IN 1890 a wealthy New York businessman suddenly went blind. For the first few desperate months he applied himself to the study of Braille. Then he bought all the available Braille books.

Soon he ran out of material. To increase his supply of reading matter he formed a small group, set up a Braille library. In 1895 Richard R. Ferry—for that was his name—gave the collection to the New York Public Library. Today the Library for the Blind takes up an entire floor.

It is no longer a local institution. Its books are sent to readers all over the United States. Magazines—after they have been perused by subscribers—are sent to the blind of Alaska, Canada, Mexico, Britain, Russia, China and Egypt.

Mrs. Alison B. Alessios, director, for many years was a librarian in one of the poorest sections of Manhattan's lower East Side. Many of her readers were recent immigrants and knew little of America's language and literature.

"In a way, they faced the same problem as my blind readers," she muses. "They, too, were blind to the content of books."

Four years ago Mrs. Alessios reluctantly took over the task of teaching sightless eyes to read. It was a hard beginning. Library stocks were inadequate. Funds were low.

Recordings Popular

GRADUALLY more books arrived. Talking books became available. A set of recordings of the Bible and Shakespeare's plays formed the vanguard. Now recordings of all types are on the shelves. They are ordered by phone; the postoffice handles them without charge.

Today the library has 44,622 Braille books and 10,584 talking books. Nearly 3000 regular readers draw on these stocks. In 1946 an over-all circulation of more than 72,000 was broken down into 39,047 calls for talking books and 33,004 for Braille.

"But that isn't enough," says Mrs. Alessios. "Many blind veterans are going back to college. They need textbooks. It's bad for them to rely on the kindness of 'readers.'"

Mrs. Alessios has bought a Soundscriber to make special recordings for sightless students. An algebra book, a sociology text, the Writer's Handbook and a history of contemporary civilization have been "dictated." There are some 100 veterans in line for this service.

A unique feature of the library is the "kitchen." Behind a thin partition is a dining alcove, a refrigerator, a shelf of china. Mrs. Alessios calls it her "psychology ward."

"We invite one or two of our new readers, and over a simple lunch they begin to talk. We discover their problems without prying."

Mrs. Alessios does not believe in forcing the blind to read. "It's no good to try to rush them over the shock." Many refuse help at first; but gradually they gain confidence, learn to use the phone. Then, one day they dial the library number.

Talking Mysteries

THERE are no "typical" reading trends among the blind. They are interested in the same books as sighted people.

There is, of course, a hard phase of readjusting for those who lose their sight suddenly. During that period they require light reading to take their thoughts off their affliction. Readers Digest and the Ellery Queen detective story publishers provide complete monthly "talking" issues for that purpose.

But once the blind begin to regain the taste for reading—"we always call it 'reading'; not 'listening'"—they ask for heavier fare.

Mrs. Alessios' favorite is a young veteran who lost both eyes in the Normandy invasion. For weeks he groped about the library aimlessly. Then he broke down: "I must have something. Something real to hold on to."

Mrs. Alessios answered his plea with poetry. A few old samples at first. He cheered up. Then more. Finally she surprised him with a special recording of anthology. The song of verse returned the color of life to the boy's mind.

Books are merely one step toward full rehabilitation. Two of the blind readers are about to become discussion group leaders in the library's city-wide program of adult education. Another turned to writing and has completed several short stories.

The toughest problem is readers who have been blind from birth. Words to them are often unrelated symbols. It is difficult to guess the picture in their minds.

Beauty Is Absorbed

MRS. ALESSIOS sometimes dreams of the perfect library: Far more books than are available now; a music room; a reference corner with earphones or soundproof booths; an assembly hall for discussions. There'd be a room for children, too; for "nothing is more important than to start these youngsters on their way with full confidence."

That ideal library would be set in a small garden. "Yes, I want it to be a beautiful place. It's all wrong to think it doesn't matter. Nobody is more sensitive to atmosphere than the blind."

Then she summed up her creed:

"Books and people belong together. But books and blind people are inseparable."

Saints Welcome Industrial Century

came to the Mormons. President Polk had found a sudden interest in the migration of the Saints when the war with Mexico broke out. A people being driven out of their homes by violence in our supposedly democratic land might become very troublesome if they settled in Mexican territory while the war was in progress. By the same token they could be very useful if they retained their allegiance. So Col. Stephen W. Kearny was authorized to receive as volunteers "a few hundred of the Mormons who are now on their way to California, with a view to conciliate them, attach them to our country, and prevent them from taking part against us."

There were murmurs among some of the Mormons against joining up to fight for a country which had offered them no protection. But Brigham Young saw the project as an intervention of Divine Providence. Of course, the migrating camps could ill afford to lose 500 of their best men. But the advantages of having this group paid for the journey westward and later released with arms and equipment, plus the advantage of demonstrating the loyalty of the Mormons to the United States, decided the issue.

Young went back along the trail, as Dale L. Morgan relates in "The Great Salt Lake," and told the Saints: "We must raise the battalion." It there are not enough young men, he said, "we will take the old men; and if there are not enough, we will take the women." The Mormon Battalion thus organized marched to Santa Fe, Tucson and San Diego before its members rejoined the Mormon migrants at Salt Lake in 1847 and 1848.

Meanwhile, the Saints spent a miserable winter on the banks of the Missouri. Hunger and inadequate shelter, in spite of their temporary houses and their farming on the run, were added burdens to the endless toil of preparing for the spring journey. Wagons were built from next to nothing. Work was exchanged for provisions wherever that was possible. And finally it was spring. The first company, whose mission it was to locate the promised land and mark the trail, began its long haul on April 5, 1847.

'Golden West' Scorned

IN THIS party were 148 persons, 72 wagons, 93 horses, 52 mules, 66 oxen, 19 cows, 17 dogs and some chickens. Three of the migrants were Negroes, and several were not members of the L. D. S. Church. Only three women and two children were permitted to go. This Camp of Israel was organized to the nth degree, and Brigham Young imposed upon it a stern discipline. It moved with relentless progress up the North Platte River, across the sagebrush hills of Wyoming and over the mountains into Salt Lake Valley. The trail was often marked by whitened buffalo skulls on which the pioneers wrote messages for those who would follow.

Jim Bridger, the most traveled mountain man of his time, gave the weary exiles favorable reports on Utah Valley, but Brigham Young was not inclined to risk a dispute with the Ute Indians over possession of that area. Sam Brannan, who had taken a company of Mormons to San Francisco by ship, journeyed inland to join the overland pioneers and implore them to go on to California. His glowing reports of the Golden Gate region and the rich California valleys fell upon deaf ears, so far as Brigham Young was concerned.

What Young was seeking was not the richest spot in the West, but the most isolated region that would sustain an industrious people. The church must find a place where it could take root and grow—where even polygamy, which was bringing so much reproach upon the Mormons, could be practiced without molestation. The Great Basin with its mountain barriers on either side was the ideal place.

Ground was plowed, crops planted and a system of irrigation applied on their very first day in the valley. A few days of exploration convinced them that no better place for a permanent settlement could be found. So the planning of a modern city—"Great Salt Lake City of the Great Basin, North America"—was begun.

There was to be no isolated settlement on farms, as in the Middle West. For the sake of developing their religious, social and cultural institutions, they built a well-integrated community surrounded by farming areas. This pattern was repeated wherever the Saints settled in the intermountain region. Land was given to each pioneer family as an inheritance and Brigham Young frowned sharply upon the buying or selling of land.

'All Is Well'

IN THE YEARS that followed, thousands of Mormon immigrants crossed the plains, many of them dragging handcarts, and settled in Utah and the surrounding area. Deaths along the route were common; nevertheless, the Saints made the desert ring with their songs. The favorite was nearly always William Clayton's stirring hymn, written on the prairie for the special purpose of cheering the weary travelers:

"Come, come, ye Saints; no toil nor labor fear,
But with joy wend your way.
Though hard to you this journey may appear,
Grace shall be as your day.
'Tis better far for us to strive
Our useless cares from us to drive.
Do this and joy your hearts will swell
All is well; all is well."

Katherine Coman concludes, in her "Economic Beginnings of the Far West," that "it was the most successful example of regulated immigration in United States history."

Within a comparatively few years the desert was transformed, and a new commonwealth shaped by toil and piety came into being. Strangely enough, immigration to Utah slowed down markedly within a decade after the completion of the transcontinental railroad in 1869 made it possible to reach that area by modern travel. The land for which water was available was by that time largely settled. The population of the State has grown enormously since, but it is largely the result of the unusually high birth rate and low death rate of the Mormon people.

Ready for Technology

THE agricultural era was followed by development of Utah's mineral resources, but these industries were not sufficient to absorb the increasing population. Consequently, Utah was in severe straits in the 1930s. Not until the burgeoning of war industry in the present decade was a reasonable balance restored between population and economic opportunities.

As Utah's second century begins, the seclusion that Brigham Young sought is only a historic memory. A vast steel plant on Utah Lake is giving stimulus to industrial development never before experienced. It is said that Brigham Young's successors view this with equanimity—some of them with complete satisfaction. They think that a century of growth in the sheltered valleys of the West has given Mormon institutions a durability that can withstand the westward sweep of industrialism in the years ahead.

The Magazine Rack

A HISTORICAL discovery, like a scientific discovery, is partly persistence, partly acute observation and partly pluck. That is the conclusion reached after reading the Saturday Evening Post's scoop this week on the new Lincoln material discovered by Stefan Lorant. The material itself, the moving new picture of Lincoln attributed to Matthew Brady and the sketches and diary of Francis B. Carpenter, painter of the Emancipation Proclamation picture, is fascinating, but the way Lorant came across it is almost as arresting as the discovery itself.

As he was revising his book on Lincoln, Lorant noticed a picture which he himself had captioned as one made by Brady for Carpenter's painting. He suddenly realized that the pose was not the same as Lincoln's in the painting and that there were probably others made on the same day. He set out to find Carpenter's descendents and found on grandson, Emerson Carpenter Ives, who if living, would be 85 years old. He found Ives in his summer home, told him his mission, and found that Ives had all his grandfather's papers, the picture Lorant was looking for, a diary made while Carpenter was living for six months in the White House and some sketches, some of which the Post prints for the first time.

VOGUE'S summer doldrums issue is so good that it can be safely recommended even to the male sex. Fashionwise the editors content themselves with trying to educate the eye to the new fall fashions—long skirts, small shoulders and nipped-in waists. After the tumult and the shouting die, that is what we are going to get, so the men might just as well accustom their eyes, too.

Passing quickly over these, we started with "Britain's Wave-Length for Intellectuals," by Novelist Elizabeth Bowen. This is the story of Britain's "Third Programme," a much-discussed experiment in cultural broadcasts which has been rather under-publicized here.

MISS BOWEN

"It was high time that, in Britain, we had again what Third Programme is not ashamed to stand for: a demand for the best." War not only threatened loss of standards and substitutions of make-do's, Miss Bowen says, England also needed to renew its artistic and intellectual contacts. Accordingly, continental artists are asked to perform and, when practical, performances will be broadcast to and from the continent.

In the matter of drama, Miss Bowen describes experiments being made with airform in order "not only not to lose but to gain from the invisibility of the actors." Contemporary writers are working to fill this need. Repeat performances are given to important shows.

Our own work in radio is described by a Sarah Lawrence professor, Mahonri Sharp Young, in "U. S. Radio. The Serious Side." Other articles: Five questions on psychoanalysis are answered by a young psychiatrist formerly on the Yale faculty; also "The Fogg Art Museum at Harvard" by Allene Talmey, with some handsome reproductions.

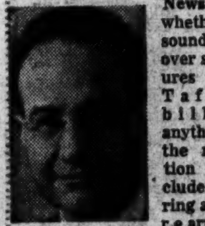
HOW long will we continue to have an anti-New Deal Congress? Is there any possibility of a change? The United States News wonders whether all the sound and fury over such measures as the Taft-Hartley bill signifies anything about the next election and concludes that barring an unlikely rearrangement of congressional districts or an alliance between farm and city labor, only a depression could change the character of Congress.



COHEN

Under "People of the Week" the News profiled State Department Counselor Ben Cohen. "His thinking . . . has been present in the changing attitudes toward Russia. It is implicit in the Marshall Plan . . ."

In going back to the famous Corcoran-Cohen days, the News says, "There was little knowledge then that Mr. Cohen, with a practical realization of what could and what could not be done politically, was often a restraining influence on New Deal planning."

HOLIDAY, always a pleasure to peruse because of its beautiful typography and magnificent color photography, is out with stories on Boston, Maine, Saratoga Springs and Williamsburg. How Holiday manages to avoid the travelogue atmosphere is a mystery, but it does. For one thing, instead of tedious descriptions of locale, Holiday delves into the moods, whims, humor and sometimes politics of the places it chooses to describe.

Of Boston, Benjamin Russell notes, "The most history conscious city . . . Only a minority of its residents are descended from the forefathers," and "those of more recent origin run the city politically." 'It is no mere coincidence that most of the bronze markers have been put up during the recurring administrations of Mayor James Michael Curley, who knows how to get emotional responses from his constituents."

BOSTON enthusiasts will find more on that renowned site in Town and Country's amusing "Customs But No Manners" by Cleveland Amory. Bostonians, Amory notes, are mindful of their traditions, but one of them is a lack of manners among the elite. Cabots, he says, are nothing if not forthright.

The Cabot husband asked the distinguished Dr. Richard Cabot to dinner and was told, "Really, I have so many people I should like to dine with but never get around to, I should not pretend that I would ever do it." Another Cabot, Judge Charles, admitted, "My wife's always telling me that I can run a community drive but I don't know how to give a Christmas present."

In the nineteenth century, Boston was the source of some hilarous books on etiquette, from which Amory quotes, but even then, he relates, Dr. Holmes noted "that among his own friends it was the exception, rather than the rule, to be 'openly pleasant and courteous.'"

"IF ALL the world's a stage, your home is one of the best, Helen Hayes points out in The Woman. Miss Hayes editorializes, "The acid test of skillful acting is in the impromptu trials of everyday home life." How do you act, she asks, "when Johnnie disobeys you or cuts his hand? Or when the roast burns, the wash line breaks?" "Despite my long training," she admits, "I still find it an ordeal to laugh spontaneously at my husband's ancient jokes the tenth time."

Kathleen Bats Out Her 76th For the Gals

KATHLEEN NORRIS
. . . Strong on fog

The Secrets of Hillyard House, by Kathleen Norris (Doubleday; $2)

LIBERTY DRYDEN, like so many of her understanding sisters who will sit down with her story and a box of chocolates, was a 24-year-old with an oh!, so prossic existence who felt life, romance and excitement passing her by in San Francisco just before the war.

Then Bill came along, but soon Bill went away; so to break the chains of humdrum, Liberty, who hasn't a known relative in the world, goes packing up the California coast to a bleak and forbidding mansion as the companion of the returning heiress presumptive to the fabulous wealth of an ill-assorted family.

Pretty soon, it seems, there is a different secret in each of the endless rooms and the sweet kid, who is someday going to have it all, emerges as not so sweet and a bit of a double-dealer, too. And the fog is rolling, always rolling in in climatic sympathy as mystery and terror confound poor Liberty's days and nights.

Miss Norris, who, by the list facing the title page, has previously compounded 75 nostrums for the lonely heart, knows her ingredients well and throws pretty nearly every one of them at the cast of Hillyard House.

New Mixture By Maugham

CREATURES OF CIRCUMSTANCE, by W. Somerset Maugham (Doubleday; $2.50).

FROM Seville to Malaya, the inexhaustible Maugham is carrying on his mission of yarn spinning.

"I have never pretended to be anything but a story-teller," he avows in introductory confession. "It is a misfortune for me that the telling of a story just for the sake of the story is not an activity that is in favor with the intelligentsia. I endeavor to bear my misfortune with fortitude."

This is a collection of 15 short pieces, each of which have previously appeared in one magazine or another, in which polished performance is consistently evident. Some are mere fragments, formless and mayhap meaningless, rich in color and talk. Others are novelettes, painted fables.

In a mixture of this sort, some of the samples are better, remain longer in memory. "The Colonel's Lady," with a Balzacian "punchline," "Winter Cruise," with sardonic restraint, and "The Unconquered," with bitter grimness, are perhaps among the finer.

He Knows His Business

Costain Pens Romance With Overtones

By Sterling North

THE MONEYMAN. By Thomas B. Costain. Doubleday. 434 pp. $3.

IN MANY ways Europe toward the end of the 100 Years War was in the same sort of mess it is in today. Ravaged, war-weary, seething with intrigue and bubbling with corruption, it stood on the brink of revolution—an easy prey for freebooters and opportunists.

As this story opens, the Maid of Orleans had gone to her fiery death some two decades previously. The torch she lighted to lead France to freedom had been so thoroughly snuffed out that the effeminate, sadistic courtiers around the weak and vicious Charles VII of France scarcely knew the story of her heroism.

Feudalism was in decline. But many of the comic opera knights in iron or silken clothing were as unaware of the fact as Cervantes' Don Quixote. They had little faith in the cannon which would soon be used to oust the English from Rouen. And they were totally unaware that they were viewing the rise of finance capitalism and modern nationalism—two vast movements which in their day were progressive forces leading toward a better form of society.

Many casual readers who will be entranced by the costumery, sword-play and intimate revelations of the King's bedchamber to be found in this novel will miss the significance of the career of Jacques Coeur, central figure of the book and a real historic personage.

Coeur needed peace and a strong France to extend his trading and financing operations. But as a French patriot and an anti-feudalist he was also idealistically involved in bettering the plight of all Frenchmen. To this end he staked every cent he had to aid in the successful attack on Rouen and the thrusting of the English back across the channel.

That he was arrested and scurrilously treated by the king, who wished to avoid repaying his debts, is a matter of record. Feudalism in its dying throes could not tolerate the success of France's first department store owner and self-made capitalist.

It is necessary, of course, to camouflage this really important theme with cloak and dagger romance for palatable consumption, and Thomas B. Costain, who is a masterful story-teller, will disappoint few of his two million readers.

Moving with enviable ease through the unwashed elegance of the period, Costain brings to vivid life Agnes Sorel, the social-minded and charming mistress of Charles (and friend of Coeur), together with such other actual historic figures as Robert de Pointevin, Jeanne de Vendome and Guillaume Gouffier.

But into this historic tapestry he deftly embroiders such imaginary characters as the peerless Sire d'Arley, in love with Valerie Maret, youthful heroine of the romance.

Valerie, chosen by Jacques Coeur to take the place of Agnes Sorel in the extra-marital bed-chamber of Charles, seems to be of lowly origin, but, of course, proves to be otherwise (furnishing a mystery angle to the tale). Will the Sire d'Arley rescue her from a fate worse than death? Or will Valerie offer her life and love for her country in quite a different way than did the Maid of Orleans? Rescue over rooftops, rides through the night, arrest and torture chambers threaten the lovers. It is all as tightly woven and breathlessly uncertain as anything Costain gave us in "The Black Rose" or "Ride With Me."

Historical novel writing these days is both a profession and very big business. The least that can be said of Costain is that he knows his business and has mastered his profession.

A drawing by Robert P. Tristram Coffin for his Macmillan book, "Yankee Coast"

THE STEEPER CLIFF. By David Davidson. Random. 340 pp. $3.

THERE is a sound rule-of-thumb in creating solid fiction or drama. Every character be he "hero" or "villain," male or female, old or young, is in some degree a projection of the author's own ego. What the fictitious protagonist does is what the author might have done under similar stress.

In the case of a Shakespeare or a Tolstoy this is difficult to imagine, since it presupposes such a rich and varied nature. But as any good writer can testify, it is virtually impossible to write a believable scene or give three dimensions to a character without intimately feeling and sharing every emotion depicted. Like a good actor or actress, the writer must "live" the part. And he must make the reader live it with him.

DAVIDSON

It all boils down to an endless search for "self." Like an amnesia victim in a hall of mirrors, we seek a half-remembered face. We listen for a half-remembered voice.

A striking and unforgettable example of such a search is to be found in "The Steeper Cliff," by David Davidson, for here a young author of extreme sensitivity not only identifies himself with his hero, Andrew Cooper, whose assignment is to rebuild the newspapers of Bavaria, but goes one long step further and lets Cooper identify himself with a liberal German, Adam Lorenz, unbending victim of Nazi persecution.

The story in briefest outline is Cooper's search for Lorenz, one of the few unsullied newspapermen left in Germany. Cooper, in disregard of orders from above, believes Lorenz would be the perfect editor for a reconstructed Bavarian daily once known for its liberalism, but perverted by the Nazis. He practically goes AWOL in tracking down this elusive paragon.

In the course of this search, Cooper, who deeply regrets that he was not a combat soldier, begins to believe that Lorenz is virtually his own alter-ego; that he, too, might have been heroic if put to a similar test; that he must find Adam Lorenz to discover the nature of courage if only vicariously. He meets and falls in love with Lorenz's young and beautiful wife. Both realize that if they find Adam they lose each other. But they continue their search.

"The Steeper Cliff" is one of the few thoroughly mature novels to come out of the war and its aftermath. It treats Germans as human beings (often thoroughly disgusting human beings) and is completely objective about our own fraternizing, looting and sometimes tyrannical officers and troops. It deals in nuances rather than bald primary pigments. Unlike the mud and blood reports that seldom rise above raw sex, hunger, filth and the desire to go home, Davidson probes mental processes on a civilized level.

He asks, even if he does not answer, the primary question of our era. Who am I? Have I the courage to stand against the universal tyranny engulfing us all? The reader finds himself asking with the author, "Could I retain my brave, democratic credo under physical torture?"

It is a question many honest men would hesitate to answer.

FOOTNOTES ON NATURE. By John Kieran. Doubleday. 279 pp. $3.

SOME cynical scientist once remarked that only rats and human beings share the ability to live in any climate, eat any diet and still reproduce copiously. Human beings, however, are one up on the rats. They also threaten with extinction most other forms of animal life with which they come in contact.

But strangely enough in our great sterile areas of brick and pavement a few wild wanderers do survive. At least once in his city room days every young reporter is assigned to cover the near miracle of a fox or raccoon or fowl lost in our terrifying forests of skyscrapers. I once kept alive for days the story of a meadowlark trapped in the wall of a LaSalle st. office building in Chicago.

John Kieran—well known expert on Shakespeare and bird life and baseball—here utilizes the time-honored formula for human interest stories of this kind. Staying fairly close to the New York City area he has managed to observe an enormous number of birds, small mammals, fish and insects.

He has found the tracks of foxes within a mile of a subway station, has observed as many as six bald eagles on a single cake of ice floating down the Hudson, within New York City limits has identified some 14 varieties of wild ducks.

I can verify some of Kieran's observations, although I cannot untangle all the warblers as Kieran can. But it takes no master mind to enjoy the scarlet tanagers, rose-breasted and pine grosbeaks, vivid indigo buntings, cheerful cardinals and some 70 other resident birds of passage to be seen in our woods.

Kieran's excited report on two snowy owls on Long Island matches an experience of one of my neighbors who lost so many of his wild ducks that he finally baited a carcass with strychnine and on a stormy midnight heard such wild, piercing, almost human cries that he went fearfully to investigate. There in its death throes flapped the almost pure white night raider, his enormous eyes glaring balefully in the light of the electric torch.

Accompanied by his friends the drama critic (Brooks Atkinson?), Herman the Magician, the medical student and other talented amateur enthusiasts, Kieran has combed nearby marshes, woods and meadows for nearly three decades. Oblivious of snow, rain, insect bites and weary muscles, he has carefully observed and logged nearly as many birds as Audubon. To all this he has added the salt of scholarship, the tang of wit, the civilizing influence of poetry. What America needs if it is to survive is more John Kierans, and fewer predatory males blasting away at feather and fur with everything from deer rifles to automatic shotguns.

Shellabarger Goes Slowly, But It Pays

NEW YORK, July 19 (AP).—Samuel Shellabarger takes a long time to write a book, but he makes it pay. His last novel, "Captain From Castile," was published in January, 1945, and was a Literary Guild selection. Next month the guild is distributing his new novel, "Prince of Foxes" (Little, Brown). The publisher's first printing is 100,000; the guild's, 675,000.

The first novel was set against a renaissance background in Spain. The second, Italian but still renaissance, is a colorful romance with Cesare Borgia's shadow lying darkly across it.

Third Projected

Shellabarger, who is now reading in the French renaissance in preparation for a third novel, finds the sixteenth century resembles the twentieth.

"It's much closer to us than the eighteenth, which is fossilized. In the renaissance there was the breakdown of standards which we see today, the same sort of ethics, the same individualism, and the ruthlessness in politics was precisely like ours now."

The "miserable critics" who always mention "swashbuckling" in connection with his novels annoy him, he says; he asks that his stories not be mistaken for the swashbuckling yarns of Dumas or Sabatini, but regarded as romances solidly based on extensive study of the period and intended to give pleasure. He doesn't even plan to point a moral, though he thinks the obvious moral is that the man of evil, whether Borgia or Hitler, can't triumph for long.

Once Taught School

A former school teacher, his hair gray and thinning, his face round, his manner genial, he furnishes a sharp contrast to the characters who crowd his fiction. But his career has been more than academic; he hunts and rides, travels widely. In World War I he was in military intelligence.

After several years in Europe he returned here with a couple of manuscripts, one a scholarly study of the Chevalier Bayard and one a detective story; the same publisher accepted them both, the Bayard under the name of Shellabarger and the other under the pseudonym of John Esteven. Later as author of a romance, he called himself Peter Loring.

An Overdue Plea

What Became of Reading Aloud?

IT MAY not have occurred to the book publishers and book clubs, but a large part of the American public is fed to the gills with books about chronic alcoholics, homosexuals, whining little failures who blame "society" for their lack of backbone, with lecherous historical novels, and with other obvious pitches to the subanthropoid in mankind.

The naturalistic novel has been a blessing in that it has been "naturalistic" rather than merely decadent. But the naturalistic novel has pretty well run its course. Freud and Hemingway have each contributed to the understanding of mankind, but literature cannot exist solely in the worship of the masters.

No one is suggesting book banning or book burning. The prurient attitude of Boston is as shameful as the burlesque show attitude toward humanity demonstrated by some of our literally hucksters who call themselves authors and publishers. But the time has come to make a plea for self-discipline in the field of writing, publishing and distributing books.

There is such a thing as human dignity. There are such things as standards of taste and decency. There is a wide margin between the utter honesty of Zola or Dreiser and the Coney Island sensationalism being promoted by firms old enough and wise enough to know better. Germany just before Hitler, France just before collapse and the Roman Empire just before dissolution showed similar cynical attitudes toward any sort of "values" whatsoever. Only men who know nothing of history or philosophy can deny that without some sort of leadership from the articulate and literate minority, the masses revert to barbarism.

WHAT TO do about it? At least two minor book clubs are attempting to distribute books which can be read aloud to the family as Dickens was read aloud to an earlier generation. They are the Family Reading Club and the Peoples Book Club. Neither has shown the ability to choose consistently the right sort of books for the market they are trying to reach. Some of the choices, particularly in the early stages of the first mentioned, were rather unsuited to family reading. Both, however, are showing vast improvement.

Actually what is needed is an editor bright enough to score direct bull's-eyes in "The Yearling" or the "David Copperfield" genre. The book must be both good literature and exciting reading; completely honest and yet sufficiently devoid of sadism and perversion to be something that can be read aloud.

Any book club that can hit that level and keep it there for five years can have a circulation of at least one million grateful subscribers who today have nowhere to turn for competent guidance in family reading.

A Champion for Thad

Reconstruction Radical Leader Has a Good Word Said for Him

I Speak For Thaddeus Stevens, by Elsie Singmaster (Houghton Mifflin; $3.50).

THADDEUS STEVENS needs a champion. It seems impossible that all of the things that have been said about this leader of Reconstruction radicals could be true. There never has been adequate explanation of the motivation for his hatred of slavery, of the paradoxical character which could impel him to plead with equal passion for enfranchisement of Negroes and disfranchisement of Southern whites.

This book does not advance Stevens' cause, however. It adds no explanation, either historical or fictional; the portrait which emerges is fuzzy and lopsided.

Miss Singmaster knows well and has written masterfully of the Pennsylvania country which was the background for most of his life. But her story is jerky and there are gaps between chapters which leave the reader in midair and necessitate some awkward retracing of ground.

The most serious fault, though, is her adulation of her subject.

Book Publishers Getting Wary

New York, July 19.—Something is going on in the book trade—just what, publishers, as well as outsiders, would lik eto know.

During the war the primary complaint was lack of paper. Almost any readable book a publisher put out could be sold—if it could be published.

Now the story is different, although not as different as you might suppose. A major publisher proclaimed in a trade paper advertisement the other day, that "it's hard to sell books again," but that doesn't mean paper is going begging because publishers fear to rush in.

The natural tendency in the face of rising costs would seem to be for publishers to think twice before going out with a new book—to stick to proved formulas and proved authors. Against this it can be and is argued that many a recent hit came from the typewriter of a new author.

Why the supply of paper has continued tight in the face of a decline in the number of titles issued may be explained by the continuing terrific demand for textbooks and technical books. Last year American colleges had more than two million students and the peak may not be reached until 1950 or 1951.

Both Basil G. Dandison and James S. Thompson found a resurgence of publishing activties everywhere, hampered in the war-devastated countries by shortages of materials and an increasing world-wide use of American technical and business literature.

Young Group Spreads Itself

Garage Too Cramped For 'World Republic'

"World Republic" is a young people's movement, as exemplified by this class of field workers receiving instructions from Robert Young, at the left

By William J. Conway

EVANSTON, ILL., July 19 (AP).—A neat three-story building in the shopping center of this sizable Chicago suburb is the new home of World Republic, an organization advocating a Federal world government. It was founded in March, 1946, by five young war veterans and two coeds, and began to function in a three-car garage.

The organizers dropped out of Northwestern University as adherents and activities increased, and they rented a former dime store. Now they have a staff of 50, including former students, teachers, a pianist, an airline stewardess, a newspaperman, a printer, a photographer and a social worker.

Those who need it get $1 a day. Those who don't, receive no pay. A kitchen and dining hall have been set up in the basement. A dormitory with doubledeck Army bunks on the second floor accommodates 14 men.

The rest of the 26,000 square feet of floor space is compartmented into offices, a printing plant, a library and a conference room for instructing field workers.

The chairman, Rempfer L. (Jack) Whitehouse, is 25. Some 2000 members are scattered around the United States and abroad.

David W. McCoy, one of the founders, reports that the nonprofit organization has received more than 4000 contributions from nonmembers. The bulk of them were $1 and $2, he says, but one was $5000.

The money is used to pay operating expenses, the rent ($20,000 a year) and installments on the secondhand furnishings.

World Republic held a fund-raising dinner June 6 in Chicago. It was addressed by Adm. Ernest J. King and was sponsored, among others, by Charles G. Dawes, Albert Einstein and Harold C. Urey, atomic scientist.

The organization has field offices in Washington, D. C., St. Louis and Nashville.

World Republic cooperates with other groups having similar aims, and espouses this platform—1. "Convene a people's world constitutional convention." 2. "Create a world constitution." 3. "Submit this constitution through governments to the people of the world for ratification."

At 83, he's the oldest member of either House. Eighty-six-year-old Joseph J. Mansfield of Texas, who died last week, previously held the title of eldest elder statesman.

North Carolina's Doughton has handled more tax bills than any other man in American history. During the Roosevelt Administration he pushed them through Congress at the rate of one a year. Only one was ever changed on the House floor.

He's handled so many, in fact, that he would just as leave never see another. Doughton was "fed up" on the tax measures long before Minnesota's Harold Knutson succeeded him as Ways and Means chairman in January.

Last week, when the President vetoed the second Knutson tax cut and fired it back at Congress a second time, a reporter asked Doughton how he felt about it.

In reply, he told this Tarheel story:

A North Carolina housewife served rabbit for dinner every night for a week. When Saturday night rolled around, it was on the table again. She asked her husband to say grace. He bowed his head and grimly said:

"Rabbit's rough, and rabbit's tough. Oh, God, I've had rabbit enough."

"And that's how I feel about tax bills," said Doughton.

ARTHUR CAPPER of Kansas is the oldest member of the Senate. He celebrated his eighty-second milepost last week, digging out from under a mountain of "Happy Birthday" letters and telegrams.

On top of the heap were two quarts of grape juice delivered by an admiring dry. Capper, a lifetime teetotaler, never touches a drop of anything stronger.

President Truman and Army Chief of Staff Dwight Eisenhower led the Capper fan barrage.

Capper launched an "Eisenhower-for-President" boom before the General of the Armies came home from overseas.

Wrote fellow Kansan Eisenhower: "May the coming years bestow every happiness upon you with the grateful appreciation of a State and Nation for your long, distinguished career."

Mr. Truman's note arrived a day late, with apologies.

"I intended to get a letter off to you yesterday,' explained the President, "but there were so many things piled up on my desk I didn't get it done. I hope you have many more happy birthdays."

Capper happily hummed over the pile of things on his own desk. Then he called his staff in for a drink—of grape juice!

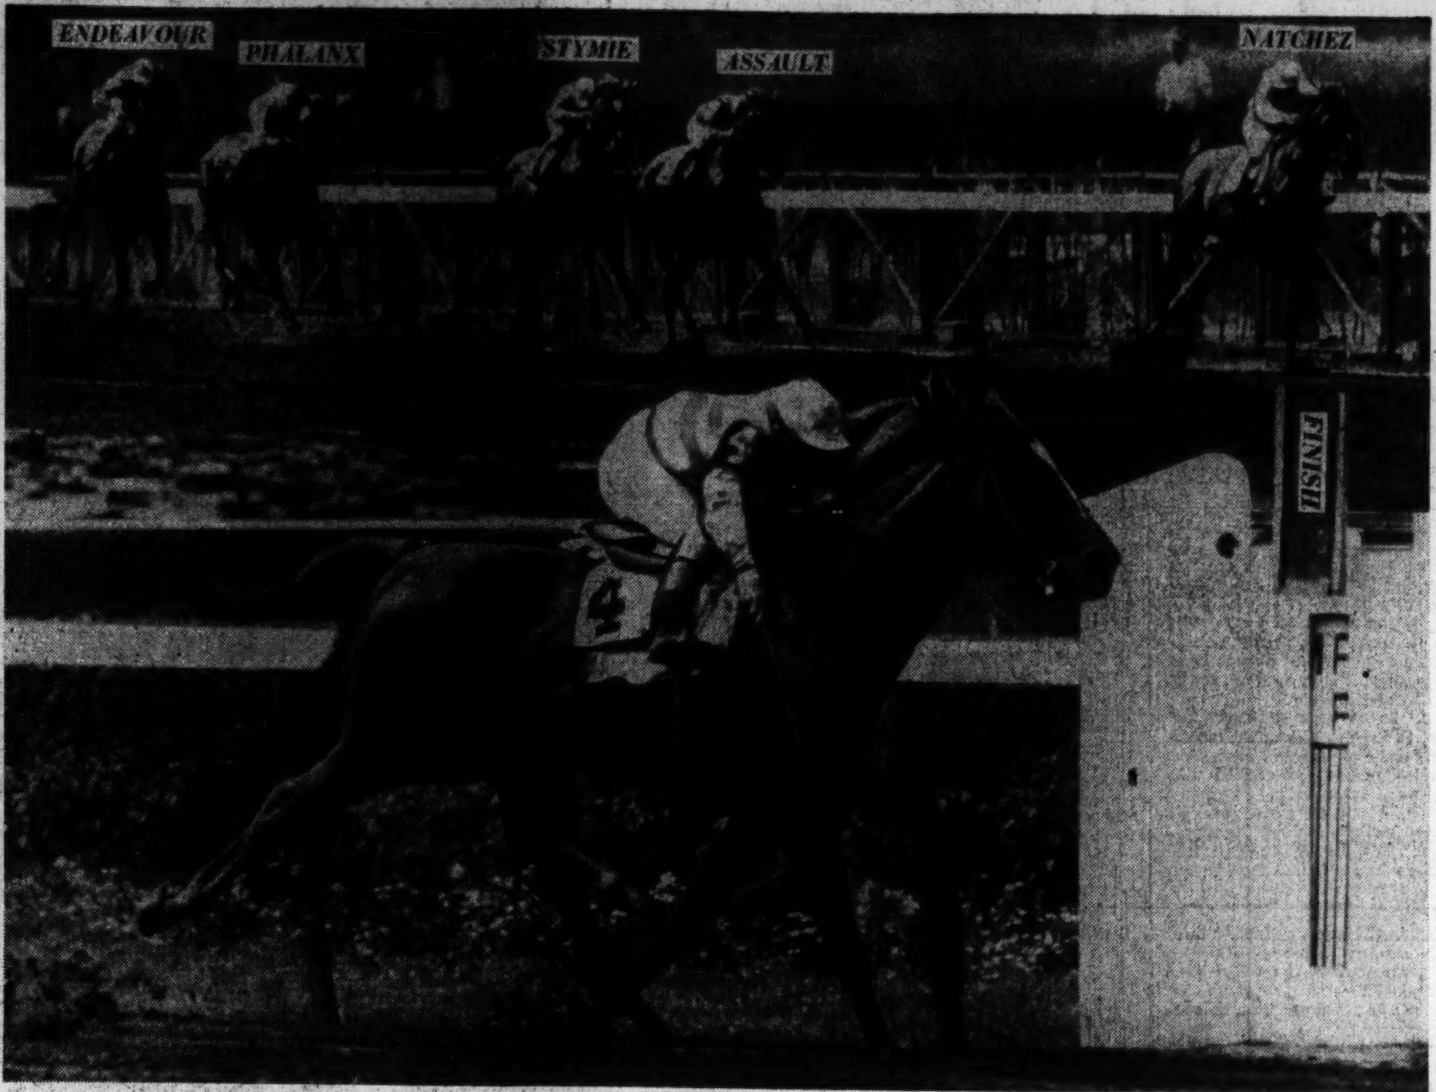
Stymie Lunges in 1st by Head in Gold Cup



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Earnings Go To $678,510; Natchez 2d, Assault 3d

Belmont Park, N. Y., July 19.—A lunge into the finish line—as if he had saved his last ounce of energy for the purpose—brought Mrs. Ethel D. Jacobs' Stymie a head victory today in a thrilling on-the-wire ending to the first running of the $100,000 added International Gold Cup.

The gallant effort, culminating a drive that began some six furlongs from home base, sent into defeat by inches, Mrs. William M. Jeffords' Natchez as a crowd of 46,183 made this end of Long Island tremble with its roars.

Four lengths behind the tight finish for the main prize of $73,000

$613,370 for Assault

Assault's earnings after beating Stymie in the Butler Handicap last week were $616,370. The $10,000 he picked up today as the third horse's share boosted his bank account to $623,370.

came the King Ranch's usually unbeatable Assault, a strange sight as he was tiring.

Another length back was C. V. Whitney's Phalanx. To his rear was a gap of 15 lengths before the finish took on an international flavor with the appearance of Argentine's Endeavour 2d.

He Pays Off at $11.50

Dick Ryan's Talon and Brazil's Ensueno were so late arriving at the finish that their riders didn't see the wreath of roses placed around Stymie's neck.

In ending Assault's perfect record since he finished third at Jamaica last October, Stymie passed the King Ranch ace again to top the all time money winners with $678,380.

The long time New York favorite paid his backers $11.50, $5.40 and $2.90. The amazing Natchez returned $15 and $3.80 while Assault's followers had to be satisfied with the crumbs of a $2.30 show mutuel.

International the race was supposed to be and it was for part of the way, but it was all-America when the big chips were down in the stretch run.

It was Ted Atkinson aboard the faltering, front-running Natchez trying with desperation to keep the son of Jamestown going, and Conn McCreary on Stymie attempting to urge that last spark out of Stymie.

A Sun-Blessed Setting

The fans sensed a gang fight stretch drive as the field packed up entering the stretch. It materialized, however, only for a few fleet moments before the struggle became strictly one between Natchz and Stymie.

The race was run over a sloppy track, but just before the field of seven broke the sun came out as if to put a blessing on international affairs—even if they involved betting with the Yankee dollar.

Stymie's time for the mile and 5 furlongs, a shade more than once around this mile and half track, was 2:42 3-5 against a track record of 2:40 4-5 set by Man O' War on September 4, 1920.

The fractions, when Natchez was setting the pace, were 2:29 4-5 for the mile and a half, 2:04 2-5 for the mile and a quarter, 1:39 for the mile and 0:48 3-5 for the half.

South Americans on Outside

The start, with the South Americans on the outside and the others in the gate, was good and Natchez had the lead in the first few jumps. Assault and Stimie were off alertly with Phalanx breaking behind Ensueno and Endeavor II.

Arcaro, on Assault, and McCreary, on Stymie, took strong grips on their mounts as Atkinson, aboard Natchez, "free reined" the 25-1 shot into the clear as they passed the finish line for the first time.

Ensueno, apparently wanted to run but Jockey Francisco Irigoyen tightened his hold and the Brazil hope followed Natchez into the first turn with his mouth forced open. Endeavor II, lightly rated was next and the other horses and boys appeared to be lagging along.

As the field approached the backstretch, many fans believed it must be a three-horse race. The front trio—Natchez, Ensueno and Endeavor II—was still in order and there was a dozen lengths of daylight before the eye settled on the next horse, Assault.

A good six lengths behind Assault was Stymie. Through the

To Whom It May Concern:

CLEVELAND, July 19.—Billy Evans, general manager of the Detroit Tigers, who used to be an umpire himself (the best), says the umpiring in the major leagues is poor and won't improve until the two-man system is restored . . . Four umpires in a game are too many, and so are three," says Evans. "They have too little work to do, aren't kept busy enough, have too much time to think of their wives, families and other interests, and are not on top of the ball game" . . . Buck Newsom's good luck was with him to the finish of his stay with the Nats. He was traded on the day before July 12, the deadline for full World Series shares for players who join the pennant-winning club in midseason . . . Clark Griffith was actually sorry the Yankees claimed Newsom at the $10,000 waiver price. The Giants were ready to pay him $20,000 if Newsom could be waived out of the American League . . . Rocky Graziano, with his ring earnings, has set his young brother up in a nice manly business—a poolroom . . . Bill Veeck's portable fence erected across the outfield of his Cleveland park to inspire more Cleveland home runs, isn't paying off. Opposing clubs have hit 20 homers over the fence this season to 15 by the Indians.

POVICH

REFEREE JOHNNY BEHR, who was mildly criticized for stopping the Zale-Graziano fight in the sixth round, defended himself eloquently with the comment: "I decided to stop it after looking into Zale's eyes and seeing nothing there" . . . The Browns' front office exaggerated the other day when it announced the attendance as 486 paid admissions. Th Nats actually were paid off on 440 cash cuctomers . . . Herbie Jones, the 19-year-old Washington lightweight who scored a one-round knockout on the Zale-Graziano preliminary card, was paid $750 for the appearance, more than he earned when he stopped Lew Hanbury in the main bout at Griffith Stadium last month . . . Henry Thompson, the colored outfielder-infielder signed by the Browns, hit a home run into the second deck off Bob Feller when Feller's All-Stars played an exhibition in Yankee Stadium last fall . . . National Football League Commissioner Bert Bell made a bright move when he ordered all coaches in the league to make public on Saturday the names of injured players not expected to play in Sunday games . . . He recognized that gamblers, who set the odds, had such information which was being withheld from the public.

WHEN JACK DEMPSEY was the victim of the "long count" given the knocked-down Gene Tunney in their Chicago title bout in 1927, it was the fault of Dempsey's manager, Leo P. Flynn . . . "It was Flynn who insisted that the count should not start until the man still on his feet went to a neutral corner," said Sheldon Clark, chairman of the Illinois Boxing Commission . . . Owner Tom Yawkey of the Red Sox called a press conference the other day to squelch a report that Catcher Birdie Tebbetts would succeed Joe Cronin as manager . . . "Not in fairness to Cronin, who knows he always has a job with me," said Yawkey, "but in fairness to Tebbetts, who should keep his mind on catching" . . . Ted Williams of the Red Sox won $5 betting on Rocky Graziano to beat Tony Zale the other night. "Stick with the hitters, I always say," said Williams after the fight . . . When Owner Bill Veech of the Indians, offered to provide Trainer Lefty Weisman with a helper, Weisman feigned panic and said, "Nothing doing. I don't want any helpers. How do you think I got my job?"

OSSIE BLUEGE'S banishment from the game by Umpire Jim Boyer in Detroit the other day, recalls his ouster by George Pipgras in Boston the first year he was managing the Nats . . . When a baseball writer suggested that Bluege must have called Pipgras too many names, Bluege denied it and declared all he said was, "You remember what Bucky Harris used to call you last year, Pipgras? Well, the same thing goes for me" . . . Clark Griffith, when he was player and manager, held the record for being thrown out of more games than any man in baseball history . . . The U. S. track team will take its own food supplies to England for the 1948 Olympics . . . The Jacobs Beach fight characters estimate that Joe Baksie's defeat by Ollie Tanberg, Swedish heavyweight, cost him $200,000, which he would have realized from a Joe Louis match had he won . . . The Nats, who soon will elect another Players Committee chairman to replace Buck Newsom, will probably name Pitcher Tom Ferrick to represent them in league affairs.

Dubois, 36, Wins Sculling Crown Over John Kelly

Detroit, July 19 (AP).—Theo DuBois of the Winnipeg Rowing Club, who at 36 years of age was rated a contender with too much seniority among oarsmen of topflight caliber, recaptured the National Singles Sculls title today in the seventy-third National Rowing Championship.

In regaining the title he won in 1941, DuBois triumphed on the Detroit River course by stroking past National Champion John D. Kelly, jr., who "caught a crab" at the quartermile mark and overturned.

Kelly, winner two weeks ago of England's coveted Henley Diamond Sculls and loser in only 2 of his last 33 starts, spilled as his left oar knifed too deeply into the water on a recovery stroke, fully two lengths ahead of the field.

For lanky, square-jawed Kelly the defat was a grim disappointment. Not only because he was heavily favored but also because "catching a crab" sometimes indicates an oarsman's lapse of technique.

"It was stupid on my part," he declared. "I caught a couple little crabs before I spilled, but I figured I was doing all right after that. I don't know what caused it. Everything happened so quickly."

Locke Breaks Canada Open Mark With 268

Toronto, Ont., July 19 (INS).—Bobby Locke, South African star, continued his dominance over North American linksmen today by winning the $10,000 Canadian Open golf championship with a 72-hole total of 268, a new record for the event.

Ed Oliver, rotund Wilmington, Del., pro who finished two strokes behind Locke, also broke the previous mark of 271 set in the 1936 Open by Lawson Little.

Oliver, who carded a three-under-par 68 today, completed his final round ahead of Locke, who at the seventeenth tee needed pars on the last two holes to win the Open and the Seagram gold cup.

The South African, instead of cracking under the strain of having to play perfect golf, proceeded to flash a brand of golf that was even better than perfect figures. Instead of getting the needed two pars, he clicked with a birdie 3 on the seventeenth and a par 4 on the eighteenth.

The atmosphere was full of drama as Locke teed off on the seventeenth, one of the Scarboro Golf Club course's tricky set-ups—a creek running across the front of the green ready to catch the drive off the tee. Only the longest hitters try for the green via a short cut that cuts down the 363 yards. The safest policy is to hit an iron short, pitch and settle for a par 4.

Locke probably would have played it safe had he not received at this critical juncture a report, later found to be errneous, that another golfer, Billy Nary, had just turned in a sensational final round to finish with a 269 total.

This erroneous report, which led Locke to believe that he now needed a birdie and a par instead of two pars, forced him to change his plans.

The South African reached for his driver to take the big gamble.

Locke made it all right, then pitched up and sank the putt for the birdie he thought he needed. The rest was anticlimax as he posted his par 4 on the eighteenth.

Loot of Rocky's Wardrobe Leaves Him Only a Necktie

New York, July 19 (AP).—Burglars left only a lone necktie in the Rocky Graziano wardrobe the night of July 8, Mrs. Graziano said today after making an inspection of the home of the newly crowned middleweight ring champion.

The burglars took 20 suits, valued at approximately $100 each, and 50 sports jackets, valued at $50 each, but left the necktie that recently was sent to Rocky when newspapers mentioned that he did not own one.

Mrs. Graziano said that some jewelry and about $60 in cash also was taken. Included in the loot was a pack of 500 ring pictures.

The Grazianos, who returned home from Chicago yesterday after Rocky's six-round knockout of Champion Tony Zale on Wednesday, live in the lower half of a two-family house in Brooklyn. Mrs. Graziano said that when Mrs. Joseph Cody, who lives on the second floor with her husband, returned home on July 8 she noted that the (Graziano front door was open.

Investigation disclosed the robbery. Irving Cohen, one of the fighter's managers was informed, but he kept it a secret until after the bout.

Nats Expect to Get Lemon, Tribe Reliever, Via Waivers

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Cleveland, July 19.—When the waiver rule machinery whirrs to a stop Monday, the Nats expect to acquire Pitcher Bob Lemon, of the Indians, at the $10,000 waiver price.

It's not an exciting prospect, and Lemon is not the man to pitch the Washington club to the 1947 pennant, but Manager Ossie Bluege confesses a desperation at this point with his pitching staff wabbly.

Lemon, a converted infielder-outfielder, has specialized in relief pitching with the Indians for the past two seasons. He won four games and lost five in 1946, and is credited with one decision this year against two defeats. He has been Cleveland property since 1939. After three years in the Army he was called up from New Orleans in 1945.

He's a Bit Wild

Owner Bill Veeck of the Indians indicated today that he would release Lemon to the Nats when the 72-hour waiver requests expire Monday morning.

Lemon is a righthander and disposed toward wildness, but Bluege today declared, "He always looked good against us. He can throw hard, overhand and side-arm, and with our staff in the condition it is, we can't be too particular. We'll also use him as a pinch hitter.

The road-weary Nats, who are in the throes of a dismal tour, have won only five of 19 games since they left the friendly confines of Griffith Stadium July 1, and blew the first six games of the trip.

Play Twin Bill Today

They were succored today by the Cleveland weather, which rained out a scheduled game with the Indians at a time when Bluege and the players confessed "We're a tired ball club."

But coming up tomorrow is another double-header with the Indians, and awaiting the Nats in the second game is Bob Feller. Mickey Haefner and Walter Masterson are the pitchers Bluege will send against Feller and Mel Harder.

The Nats' most recent effort, a five-hit shutout beating by the Indians, saw both their pitching and hitting collapse, Bluege threw up his hands in disgust after the game.

"Back in Detroit, we finally started to hit, and our pitching went sour," he said. "When we get well-pitched ball games, we don't hit. This is no fun."

Future Isn't Rosy, Either

There's no indication that matters will improve, either. Bluege is now resigned to the sorely obvious fact that the Nats aren't a hitting ball club, and Joe Grace who did represent some power against right-handed pitching is still so pained by his shoulder injury he can hardly swing a bat.

At a time when his own pitching has been ragged, Bluege is unperturbed nevertheless by two impressive victories scored by Buck Newsom since being sold by the Nats to the Yankees a week ago.

"He couldn't win for us, and looked like he never was going to," said Bluege. "We started him nine times and he lasted just once. We weren't going anywhere with Newsom, so I'm not going to moan about his absence from our club."

Nats-Phils Game Tickets on Sale

Tickets for the benefit game between the Nats and Philadelphia National League team here August 18, will go on sale at Griffith Stadium tomorrow morning.

Proceeds from this game will go to the Damon Runyon Cancer Fund. Clark Griffith is chairman of the Washington sports committee working for this cause.

The Phillies and Nats will meet in an afternoon contest, starting at 3 o'clock.

Dutch Leonard, former Nat pitching ace, probably will start the game for the Phillies

New Recreation Center Opening

The formal opening of the Bradbury Heights Recreation Center will take place this afternoon at 2 o'clock when a seven-inning softball game will be played by boys of the neighborhood. At 3 o'clock, the men will play a regular nine-inning game against an outside team.

The center was constructed through the efforts of the Bradbury Heights Citizens Association and is located on Riggs rd. between Ely and Burns sts. se.

Yanks Start New Streak; Beat Tigers

Detroit, July 19 (AP).—Back in high gear with the pressure off from their record-equalling victory string, the runaway New York Yankees squeezed out a 2-to-1 triumph over the Detroit Tigers—their thirty-second victory in 36 games—and restored their American League lead to 11½ games.

Allie Reynolds, Yankee fireball hurler, tossed a smart five-hitter at the second-place Tigers to register his eleventh win of the season in a duel with Detroit's Paul (Dizzy) Trout, who gave up only six blows.

The Yanks won it without delay in the opening inning, counting both their runs on George Stirnweiss' single, Tommy Henrich's double and long flies to right by John Lindell and Joe DiMaggio, a run scoring after each catch.

Trout hurled effective four-hit ball after that to blank the Bronx Belters the rest of the way, but Reynolds was too stingy with his base hits when Detroit put runners on the sacks.

Armed Passes Whirlaway In Earnings

Chicago, July 19 (AP).—Armed, the Calumet Farms' gallant gelding, catapulted to third place in the list of world's leading money winners today by an easy victory in the $55,500 Arlington Park Handicap before 30,000 fans. Armed earned $37,400 first money.

Armed's margin over the King Ranch's Bridal Flower, stablemate of Assault, was a length, but the golden gelding never was in any danger after taking the lead from Bridal Flower on the first turn.

The Brolite Farm's Challenge Me was third, slightly more than two lengths behind Bridal Flower. Frer Jacques, Take Wing, Pellicle, Eternal Reward and Mighty Story finished in order. Rippey, in the original field, did not start.

The winner, with Jockey Douglas Dodson astride, covered the mile and a quarter in 2:02 2-5 and carried top weight of 130 pounds.

Armed's winnings today enabled Owner Warren Wright of Chicago to smash his stable's own world record for annual earnings. With the end of the 1947 season still a long way off, Calumet Farm has earned a record $639,060. Calumet's previous mark of $601,660 was established in 1944.

Armed moved past his stablemate Whirlaway, in earnings. Armed now has accumulated $568,775 to become the richest Calumet Farm horse in history and to place third behind Stymie and Assault in the financial race. Whirlaway earned $561,161 during his career.

Armed paid $2.80 $2.20 and $2.20. Bridal Flower returned $4.20 and $2.80 and Challenge Me paid $3.00 to show.

—A Small Sound, But . . .—

Stymie Heard His Race Orders

BELMONT PARK, N. Y., July 19 (AP).—Little Conn McCreary, about as tall as a wheelbarrow and plastered with mud for the short distance between his boots and his cap, said he knew three-eighths of a mile from home that the horse under him, Stymie, was going to win the $100,000 Gold Cup.

"I was just pushing him a little with my hands at that point," he explained exuberantly as he unshucked himself from his splattered silks. "Nothing much happened, so I went like this at him. (He pursed his lips and produced the sound that has been causing horses to giddy-up since grandpa's days.)

"He nearly went out from under me," the little fellow exclaimed.

"I hauled back on him quick and said 'whoa, whoa, we dont want to go that fast yet' I knew then how much run he had in him."

MCCREARY estimated that he was 20 lengths behind the leader, Natchez, and at least 10 behind Assault at one point in the early stages of the race.

"It was a long way, but that's the way he likes to run. He's a great horse," he said.

Not a rider that came into the dressing room had quite as much mud on him as McCreary. Ted Atkinson, who sent the speedy Natchez into the lead at the start and kept him there right to the final, futile jump, was as clean as a whistle.

"I could have won it if either of those two horses hadn't been in it," he declared. "They beat me, not Stymie."

He referred to the two South American steeds, Ensueno and the huge Endeavour II, which took turns running at him right from the first sprint down the grandstand straightaway until they turned into the stretch.

Bobby Permane, the jockey who rode Stymie a week ago, when Assault put on a dramatic finish to beat him in the Butler Handicap, elbowed his way in to congratulate McCreary on his great ride. It was, a neighbor explained, a fine sporting gesture.

STYMIE, $11.50, $5.40, $2.90; NATCHEZ, $15.00, $3.80; ASSAULT, $2.30.

STYMIE was badly outrun as usual in early part, began to make up ground at end of first mile. Going into far turn he was steered to outside where he would be clear of all interference. Going into final furlong he caught ASSAULT and then set sail for the leader, NATCHEZ. Under a powerful ride by McCreary he closed gamely at end and was up to win in final nod. NATCHEZ was sent to front early, displayed keen speed and was next best. ASSAULT was well ridden. He was allowed to gallop along in contending position, made bid around turn but faltered badly at end. PHALANX moved up gamely but was no match for the winner. ENSUENO displayed good speed in the going for a mile then quit. ENDEAVOUR II made bid at far turn then faded away.

Davis, Blanchard Join All-Stars

Chicago, July 19 (INS).—Glenn Davis and Felix (Doc) Blanchard, all-American twin terrors from Army, tonight accepted invitations to joint the college All-stars in their battle against the Chicago Bears at Chicago August 22.

The famous duo are currently making a movie in Hollywood. Will then report to respective Army posts for further training.

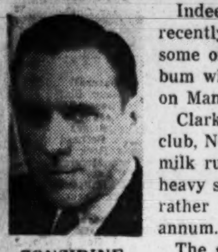
Blanchard, has been assigned to Randolph Field, Tex., and Davis will be stationed at Fort Riley, Kans.

Cardinals Pare Brooklyn Lead to 2½ Games

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

NEW YORK, JULY 19 (INS).—There are those bleak souls who would dismiss Louis Norman Newsom, of Hartsville, S., C., and the New York Yankees, as a jammering crackpot, a bragging lout and wandering ne'er-do-well.



CONSIDINE

Indeed, when he was given a Yankee uniform recently—tantamount to a World Series bonus—some of the Yanks growled that he was a lucky bum who would have to prove his right to ride on Manager Bucky Harris' speeding gravy train.

Clark Griffith, the old boss of the Washington club, Newsom's previous stop on what has been a milk run through organized baseball, gave off a heavy sigh of relief when he unloaded Newsom's rather imposing salary, reportedly $22,000 per annum.

The sigh was mingled with a groan, however. Griff was all prepared to peddle his eccentric northpaw to Horace Stoneham of the Giants for a $15,000 profit. But the Yankees wouldn't let him stray from the American League corral and lassoed him for the cheap waiver price.

Take a breath:

Newsom has now played for Raleigh, of the Piedmont League; Greenville and Wilmington, of the Eastern Carolina League; Macon, Sally League; Brooklyn, Jersey City; Macon again; Little Rock of the Southern Association; the Cubs; Albany of the International; Los Angeles; the St. Louis Browns; Washington Senators, Boston Red Sox; Browns again; Detroit Tigers, Senators again, Brooklyn again, Browns again, Senators again, Philadelphia Athletics, Senators again and now, at long last, the Yanks, where he wanted to play all the time.

Newsom's no dope. He's just a nonconformist. I have known Bobo about as intimately as a sedentary newspaperman can get to know an athlete. He has never done anything that dissuaded me from believing that the Almighty, in some antic moment, created him from an old Ring Lardner baseball story. He's Jack Keefe, who knew a guy named Al.

The best answer I've found to the mystery of Bobo's rootless baseball life is that no alien pasture ever looked greener to a restless horse than a good rival club looks to Bobo.

When Bobo was with Washington in the middle 1930's, he took a shine to Tom Yawkey and played his way onto the Sox. This is not to say that he let Washington down. What he did was bear down mightily whenever he pitched against Boston, always had a friendly wave for Yawkey, and soon was with Boston.

Then he decided he liked Detroit. So he began concentrating on beating Detroit and hailing Walter O. Briggs as a gentleman and scholar. And Bobo went to Detroit. Some years later, after, like water, he had reached his true level—Brooklyn—he decided that the greatest man in baseball history was Connie Mack. Somehow, Bobo went to work for Mr. Mack.

Bobo made a number of stabs at the Yankees through the years. Against them he'd pitch his heart out, but Joe McCarthy's social hide was on the thick side, and Bobo's hearty hellos bounced off same like ping-pong balls.

EACH NEW JOB represents a shot in the arm for Bobo. When he first came to Washington from the Browns he had failed to win a game in eight or ten starts. He promptly beat the White Sox, 11-0, then turned in a great game against the Indians despite the fact that from the second inning on he was pitching with a broken knee-cap.

He had a bad record with Washington this season, but vigorously has won his first two starts with the Yanks. His victory Thursday gave the Yanks their eighteenth straight win—and gave Bobo himself 200 big league triumphs.

Nobody who knows Bobo can dislike him or resent his wonderful boasts. He was pitching for Washington the day Joe DiMaggio made his debut against that club. Before the game, Bobo confided, in his best auditorium manner, that he'd run DiMag back to the Pacific Coast League.

In the first inning DiMaggio doubled fiercely to left. In the fourth he doubled sharply to right. In the seventh he doubled to center and knocked Bobo out of the box. I asked Bobo about this after the game, and he shrugged and said, "What can you do with a guy with a horseshoe in every pocket?"

Once he mentioned to me that he had won 33 games with Los Angeles in 1933. I coughed a bit and told him the record book said 30.

"Who you going to believe?" he demanded, hurt.

ANOTHER TIME, during a visit to him in Hartsville, at a time when he was a holdout with Washington, he instructed me to tell Clark Griffith that he would never pitch another ball for the old man as long as he lived.

I hopped in my car and drove like a fiend to Washington's spring training camp. Griff was standing in the hotel lobby and before I could open my yap to blurt the news, the old man said:

"Here's a piece for your paper. Newsom drove in a couple hours ago and signed up."

Bobo once wrote an enthusiastic letter to Phil Wrigley, telling the Cubs' boss that he was raring to go and would win 20 for him, sure. Wrigley was delighted until he learned that Bobo had used the cast on his broken leg as a writing table.

Bobo recovered from that, but on his first day out of the cast he went to a mule sale and was standing there innocently when a fractious animule jumped a fence, backed up to Bobo, let fly with both hooves, and broke Bobo's leg in the same place.

His tremendous performance in the 1940 World Series, when he won a crucial game the day his father died (Pop had come up from Hartsville to see his boy) and would have won a third except for some terrible support, remains one of the highlights of baseball history.

Quite a guy, our Mr. N. It will be great to see him in another series.

7-5 Margin Run Up in Late Innings

Brooklyn, July 19 (AP).—Hitting safely in all but two innings, the world champion St. Louis Cardinals defeated the Brooklyn Dodgers, 7-5, today to cut the Brooks' first-place National League margin over the runner-up New York Giants to two-and-one-half games.

The fourth-place Red Birds combed the offerings of Vic Lombardi and Hank Behrman for 14 hits while Howie Polley and Murry Dickson checked the Dodgers with 10.

Both Pollet and Lombardi were in plenty of trouble during their stay on the mound. Pollet finally bowed out for a pinch-hitter in the sixth and Lombardi was driven to cover when the Cards clinched the game with a two-run rally in the seventh.

The Cards picked up two runs in the first when Johnny Jorgensen made a wild throw on Joe Medwick's infield hit with the bases loaded. The Brooks bounced back with two in their half on a walk, double, fly out and a double steal with Jackie Robinson swiping home.

Brooklyn went out in front by scoring once in the second but the Cards came back with two in the fourth on three singles, a walk and fly-out. The Dodgers tied the score for the last time in their half of the fourth on three singles and Robinson's force-out.

Enos Slaughter tripled to open the Cards' winning frame and scored on Medwick's fly. Marty Marion and Del Wilber followed with singles and after Dickson was retired, Red Schoendienst slapped a one-bagger to score Marion with what proved to be the winning run.

The Dodgers came back with one in their half but the Cards sewed up the game in the eighth when Pinch-hitter Ron Northey hammered a triple after Slaughter walked with two out.

Rutgers Crews Now In Belgium Regatta

Brussels, July 19 (AP).—Rutgers University crews have arrived in Belgium for an International Rowing Regatta to be held here tomorrow and Monday. The Americans will be the first oarsmen to compete in Belgium since the 1920 Olympic games at Antwerp and Belgium rowing experts are looking forward to two races—the junior eight and senior eight.

In both of these, the Americans are matched with Belgium's best crews and Holland's champion "Delftsche Sport" eight which placed second in the grand challenge cup at Henley this year.

Williams Holds 1st Spar Session

Summit, N. J., July 19 (U.P.).—Ike Williams, the National Boxing Association's lightweight champion, boxed against a sparring partner for the first time today in preparation for his title fight against Bob Montgomery in Philadelphia Stadium on August 4.

Williams went two rounds against Doug Ratford of New York, a former sparmate for Montgomery, at the indoor gymnasium at Ehsan Camp. At the end of the workout, Ratford said he believed Williams was a better boxer and punched harder than Montgomery.

He's Better, But . . .

Yankees Not Counting on Keller in '47

New York, July 19 (AP).—Charley Keller, slugging New York Yankee outfielder, is recovering in a New York hospital from an operation to relieve the back ailment that has sidelined him for several weeks, but his teammates expressed doubt today that he would return to uniform this year.

"He is getting along as well as could be expected, although he spent an uncomfortable night," said Keller's wife, the former Martha Lee Williamson, who came with their children from their Maryland farm to be near the baseball star after his operation.

A team physician said the former University of Maryland athlete, who underwent an operation for the removal of a ruptured spinal disc at the New York Hospital for Special Surgery, would "be in the hospital for two weeks and should recover in six to eight weeks."

"From what I've seen, I'd say he definitely has a chance to get back into uniform in September and in shape for the series in October," said the doctor, who preferred to remain anonymous.

In Detroit, where the Yankees' league record-equaling victory streak was snapped at 19 games yesterday, members of the club shared the physician's hope that Keller would be able to return to action in September.

But most of them expressed grave doubts that the 30-year-old slugger would be able to recover from the operation and the long layoff in time to break into the line-up again this year.

Honeymoon Wins, Becomes Threat For $100,000 Race

Inglewood, Calif., July 19 (AP).—Harry M. Warner's Honeymoon, redeeming herself after two successive setbacks, emerged as a threat in the $100,000 Gold Cup next week by waltzing off with the $25,000 Vanity Handicap for mares and fillies at Hollywood Park today.

Honeymoon's decisive win over nine rivals, with Good Excuse, second and Nepotism, third, topped the day's double-main event, the favored entry of Grandpere and Solidarity running one-two in the $25,000 Laddie Stakes for two-year-old colts and geldings.

Jockey Jack Westrope kept the Warner beauty off the blazing pace set by Harry N. Isenberg's Double F. F., but gave her free rein entering the stretch and she flew past the fast fading pace-setter and won away by five lengths.

The time, 1:42 flat for a 1-1-16 was two fifths behind the track record.

Honeymoon, the strong favorite, paid $4.20, $2.90 and $2.60; Good Excuse, $4.10 and $3, and Nepotism, $3.40.

Jones Scratches Armed From Monmouth 'Cap

Monmouth Park, N. J., July 19 (AP).—Calumet Farm's Armed has been withdrawn from next Saturday's renewal of the $25,000 Monmouth Handicap, Racing Secretary John Turner, jr., disclosed today.

Trainer H. A. Jones advised Turner from Chicago that the son of Bull Lea would not be on hand and requested that Armed be withdrawn from the mile and a quarter stake.

Williams Bats Bosox To 1-0 Win

St. Louis, July 19 (AP).—For their second consecutive game with Boston, the St. Louis Browns appeared to be playing a man named Williams today as they dropped a 1-0 loss to the Red Sox, but Pitcher Earl Johnson's three-hitter was a contributing factor.

Lanky Ted, whose five hits last night including two homers were good for five runs, singled to right field in the sixth and scored Johnny Pesky with the only run.

Johnson was in trouble as the first three Brownies to face him loaded the bases on singles. But when Jeff Heath flied to Sam Mele, the Browns held their bases in deference to Mele's accurate throwing arm, and Willard Brown, Negro playing his first game with the Browns since he was signed Thursday, hit into a double play, a performance he repeated in the fourth inning. The Brownies went hitless after that.

Brown played centerfield in place of Paul Lehner, who told Manager Muddy Ruel an injured leg had pained him all night.

Aussie Boxer Dies Of Ring Injuries

Brisbane, Australia, July 19 (AP). John Rewan Lewis, 20-year-old professional boxer who was knocked out in a preliminary bout at Brisbane Stadium last night, died in a hospital here today.

Lewis, father of a three-day-old child, was fighting strongly in the last round when he took a solid right hand punch from Keith Furner and fell heavily, striking his head. It was the second ring fatality among professional fighters in Australia this year. Rip Bunker, a flyweight, died after being knocked out in the twelfth roud by Jimmy Hoge at Sydney in February.

Giants to Meet Rams

New York, July 19 (AP).—A preseason game between the National Football League New York Giants and Los Angeles Rams will be played at the Polo Grounds here Wednesday night, September 17, it was announced today. Proceeds of the game will be shared by the Hearst Fund for disabled veterans and other service charities.

Doris Hart Gains French Net Find

Paris, July 19 (U.P.).—Doris Hart defeated Louise Brough in a semifinal match in the French Lawn Tennis championships today before rain forced postponement of the other match, involving Margaret Osborne and Mrs. Patricia Todd.

Miss Hart, bronzed Miami star who upset the Beverly Hills, Calif., blonde at Wimbledon, repeated the victory today, 6—2, 7—5, showing superiority in every department of play. Miss Hart's hard forehand and sharp backhand kept Miss Brough dashing from side to side of the court and her lobs usually were just out of Miss Brough's reach.

Miss Osborne, Wimbledon champ from San Francisco, led Mrs. Todd, Lajolla, Calif., player, by 6—2, 2—2, when rain ended play. The second set will be finished Sunday. Doubles play also was rained out.

Net Play Postponed

New York, July 19 (AP).—All action today in the Eastern clay court tennis championships was postponed until tomorrow because of rain.

Colts Sign 4 More Players

Baltimore, July 20 (AP).—The signing of four more players by the Baltimore Colts of the All-America Professional Football Conference was announced today as Coach Cecil Isbell and his staff readied the team's Hershey, Pa., training camp for opening next Friday.

The latest additions to the Colts' roster are Nick Kerasiotis, 205-pound specialist in field goals and conversions from St. Ambrose, Ia.; Bill Hempel, 228-pound tackle from Carroll College, Wis.; Vic Marino, 205, outstanding member of the 1939 Ohio State Big Ten championship eleven, and Huel Hamm, 197-pound fullback from Oklahoma.

Giants Sign Pair

New Braunfels, Tex., July 19 (AP).—Bill Lacy scout for the New York Giants baseball team announced today the signing of two New Braunfels boys to contracts and said they had been assigned to the Jacksonville, Tex., team in the Lone Star League for the remainder of the season. The two players are Ray Kott, 20-year-old catcher, and Randolph Reinarz, 20-year-old right-handed pitcher.

Pine Crest Leading In County Softball

Pine Crest, undefeated in four games, is setting the pace in the second half of the season in the Montgomery County Sunday softball league. The Glen Echo post of the American Legion is close behind with a record of three wins and one defeat.

Today's schedule has M & K's playing Bethesda, Chevy Chase at Rock Creek number one; Pine Crest plays Silver Spring Business Men at Jessup Blair, and Rolling Wood tangles with Glen Echo at Rock Creek number two.

Crew Coach Retires

Princeton, N. J., July 19 (AP).—Gordon G. Sikes, former head crew coach at Princeton University and current treasurer of the rowing committee for the 1948 Olympic Games, has retired, it was announced today.

Veeck Must Undergo Another Leg Operation

Cleveland, July 19 (AP).—Cleveland Indians President Bill Veeck, whose Tribe recently lost six straight games, had another siege of bad luck today—doctors informed him to return to Cleveland Clinic Hospital for another operation on his right leg Tuesday.

The former Marine, who consented to removal of his right foot last November after he failed to recover from injuries received at Bougainville during the war, celebrated delivery of an artificial limb by throwing a dance soon after he left the hospital last fall.

Win or Lose, Bratton Boy Packs 'Em in

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

EVEN IF THE great expectations of Matchmaker Gabe Menendez are realized and his Herbie Jones - Johnny Bratton lightweight fight August 4 draws a $25,000 gate, the payoff will be comparatively peanut money for the Chicago Bratton boy.

Although beaten in his last two starts, Bratton found plenty of solace at the box office. His losing encounter with Gene Burton, a full-grown welterweight, recently packed 'em in the Chicago Stadium to the tune of a $63,000 house.

And his unsuccessful fight with ageless Sammy Angott saw $85,000 pass through the stadium box offices.

The Angott and Burton reversals dropped Bratton from the No. 2 spot on the NBA lightweight ratings (January) to No. 8 (July), but he's still a lot of fighter. He's only 20, and those who have seen him in action report the young Negro is one of the classiest articles in the ring today.

CHICAGOANS, who take fights and fighters seriously, were booming their Honeyboy for a shot at the 135-pound title after he ran up 10 straight victories against opponents who included Willie Joyce and other fair-to-middlin' adversaries.

Burton and Angott, however, quelled the cry temporarily and now Bratton, at 20, hits the comeback trail.

He'll find no easy pickings in Washington's southpaw biffer. Jones, who finally crashed the NBA ratings (honorable mention) himself, packs a dynamite punch in his left hand. He exploded it in full view of Bratton last Wednesday in Chicago when he deposited one Jackie Nichols in the first round of the semi-windup to the Zale-Graziano affair.

THE HURSEY-KAPILOW rematch for August 11, which awaits only Hursey's consent to become a reality, moved a step closer yesterday when Sonny Horne was named as the opponent for Anton Raadik at Madison Square Garden August 1.

Hursey and his manager, Mel Stevenson, had been offered the shot against Raadik and were holding this over Promoter Goldie Ahearn's head in an effort to get 35 per cent for another session with Kapilow. Matchmaker Nat Rogers, of Madison Square Garden, couldn't dilly-dally any longer and grabbed Horne for the assignment.

Hursey is now in High Point, N. C., and has promised Ahearn an answer by Tuesday. Ahearn has offered him 30 per cent to try his hand against Kapilow again.

He'll accept.

Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis saw Smuggy throw one punch, but that one belt must have impressed the champ, who remarked after the Hursey-Kapilow affair, "That Hursey fellow looks like a comer." . . . Louis, incidentally, is again available for any exhibition (boxing) against Primo Carnera now that he won't defend his title again until 1948. "I'd love it," Louis said, when asked what he thought of the idea of matching him against the one-time boxing champion turned rasler. Da Preem, however, is not so keen for the idea. . . . The shortest fight in Washington history was a 33-second kayo by Bobby Wilson over Paul Dublinsky in 1934. And Wilson dumped Dublinsky in the same corner Hursey deposited Kapilow in 41 seconds the other p. m. . . . Smuggy Hursey has contributed over $700 to the gymnasium his manager, mighty Mel Stevenson, operates. It was there the Smug got his start.

Team Match Bout Tops Rassle Card

A four-man team match was completed last night for the weekly wrestling show at Turner's Arena next Wednesday night. Olaf Erickson, the wrestling Swede, and Billy Darnell of Indianapolis will tackle Kola Kwarini and Joe Komaroff, Russian mat experts, in the group contest.

Headlining the show is a double windup with Gino Garibaldi of St. Louis facing Farro Rinaldo of South America. George Macriscostas, the Golden Greek, is returning to meet George Red Ryan in the other top bout. Ryan pinned Sheik Badui on the last show.

Eagles Sign Steele

Philadelphia, July 19 (AP).—Ernie Steele, veteran halfback and one of the fastest men in the National Football League, signed today to return for his sixth season with the Philadelphia Eagles. Steele played in nine games last year, gaining 108 yards in 31 attempts.

Hippensteil Beaten in Straight Sets

Lieut. Dave Freeman, former Harvard medical student, showed little respect for rank yesterday as he defeated Capt. Charles Hippensteil of the Sixth Army, 6—0, 6—4, 6—3, to win the Army Tennis Championship yesterday at Army-Navy Country Club in Arlington.

The Army doubles title went to the Far Eastern Command's Pfc. Hugh Stewart and Capt. Elson Staugaard, who outlasted T/Sergt. Tom Molloy and Capt. R. P. Evans of the Air Transport Command, 6—4, 6—4, 2—6, 7—9, 6—1.

The cotton-haired Freeman played hard, consistent tennis to defeat his rival who dropped the first six games before he regained his composure. That first set was a baseline battle, with Freemen content to allow Hippensteil to err. The former intercollegiate star miscued 23 times.

Hippensteil held his service during the first six games of the second set, but finally allowed the colorful Freeman to overpower his service during the seventh game, and coast in. Freeman grabbed five of the first six games in the third set before easing up and allowing Hippensteil to take two straight games. But the tiring Sixth Army veteran wilted in the ninth game to bow.

Reynolds Presents Awards

On two points in a row during the second set, Freeman shots hit the top of the net and bounded fair into Hippensteil's forecourt for placements. After the second such shot, Freeman called time, rushed to the net, and kissed it.

Freeman, who was presented the winning trophy by Brig. Gen. Russel B. Reynolds, chief of Special Services of the War Department, learned his tennis on the playgrounds of his home town, Pomona, Calif. He has been national badminton champion since 1939, having last defended his crown in April.

He was flown to Washington for the tourney from the Canal Zone where he is stationed with the Carribean Command's Army Medical Corps. He was seeded second and Hippensteil third.

The Stewart-Staugaard combination used the same kind of strategy to take the doubles trophy as did Freeman in the singles play.

Steady Tennis Does It

They needed to play only steady tennis to win, although they received a big assist from the short temper of T/Sergt. Molloy. Several times when he missed his shots, Molloy slammed his racket to the court, and once he even kicked a loose ball over the fence.

Meanwhile, Molloy's tight-lipped temmate earned the plaudits of the crowd with his stylish play. It wasn't until the end of the fourth set that the onlookers learned that Captain Evans was playing despite severe pain his right arm. He had to call time before the fifth set to have doctors apply a shot of morphine to his arm.

Among the large gathering of commissioned officers at the championship matches were four generals, including Maj. Gen. Leslie Groves of atom bomb fame.

Leavins Enters Virginia Final

Roanoke, Va., July 19 (AP).—Don Leavins, hard-stroking left-hander from Washington, and Oliver "Bo" Roddy, a polished 18-year-old youngster from Charlotte, N. C., won their way into the finals of the second Exchange Club tournament here today, and will clash Sunday for the championship.

Roddy, fifth ranking player in the Southern Conference, disposed of Buddy Adair, Chevy Chase, Md., in straight sets this afternoon, 6—1, 6-0, after Adair had provided the singles play with the upset of the day in eliminating the Rev. Fred West, defending champion, in the quarter finals.

Leavins fought a gruelling two-hour match with Landon Buchanan, Roanoke City champion, in the other afternoon semifinals and finally ousted the Doanoker,, 3—6, 6—3, 6—3.

Detroit Reports Handle of a Million

Detroit, July 18 (AP).—A Kentucky filly won the feature and the betting total hit over a million dollars for the second time in the Detroit Fair Grounds race-track's history today.

O. F. Woodward's Hilda snatched the $10,000 Champ Handicap by a head over John's Ace. She turned the five furlongs in a nice 1:01 3/5, her first race on a heavy track, and paid $7.40. Test Passer was third by two lengths.

Heckman Wins Title

Hershey, Pa., July 19 (AP).—Walter Heckman, former Army sergeant of Adamstown, Pa., outshot his veteran adversaries today to win the Pennsylvania Public Golfers Association Championship with a 721hole score of 295, three strokes ahead of 61-year-old George Bradley of Philadelphia. Heckman was playing in his first publinx tourney.

'Lefty' McIntyre as Enthusiastic as Ever About Baseball After Pitching 30 Years

By Al Costello
Post Reporter

Perhaps the most remarkable thing about a remarkable character like Robert Lee McIntyre is his enthusiasm.

Robet Lee McIntyre has been pitching baseball in and around this man's town for the past 30 years, which, no matter how you figure it, is slightly longer than temporarily.

Maybe you know Robert Lee better as "Lefty." He's never been anything but "Lefty" since that bright day in April, 1917, when as a tall, skinny 14-year-old drink of water, he took the mound for the old Aztec Juniors and started southpawing a streak of white lightning.

At 44, he plays with Naiman Photo, current leader in the Post-Industrial League which is recognized as the fastest sandlot loop in town. He has won 12 and lost three in the week-day league but is chaffing because he doesn't play enough. Only the other day signed to play with Sunnybrook in the Prince Georges County League on weekends.

He's Always Around On Job

always around the ball fields and often serves as official scorer in the Post-Industrial League, which duties also mean bringing the scores to the newspapers and reporting same. When he isn't either playing or scoring, he's around somewhere else umpiring.

"Lefty" is a sandlot edition of Rube Waddel, "Dizzy" Dean and Bobo Newsom.

Years ago, when "Lefty" was still in his teens and the Aztecs and Mrs. Lennie Rock's Linworth A. C. were constantly battling for the city championships, his Aztec teammates would take turns guarding "Lefty" before an important game. Otherwise "Lefty," not unlike Waddell, would be down on the Monument Lot pitching for another team a few hours before the championship playoff.

He always was as talkative and as tempermental as the great "Dizzy." Only he doesn't mean to brag. His temperment, now controlled after years of experience, once was as unpredictable as the weather.

They still talk about the time down Southwest when "Lefty," leading 2-1 in the last inning of a city tournament game, became enraged at a bad decision, threw the ball from the pitchers' mound at Army War College over the roof of the nearby officers' quarters to let the two runs score that beat him.

Several hundred Aztec fanatics chased him home and they weren't planning to pelt him with roses, either.

"Lefty" had chances to go up to the big leagues but always something stopped him. He played with Martinsburg in the Blue Ridge League when such fellows as Joe Medwick, Joe Vosmik, Chick Fullisc and Rollie Hemsley were on the way upward.

He was with DeLand and Orlando in the Florida State loop with Early Wynn, Ellis Clary, Sid Hudson and "Ducky" Buscher, former University of Maryland star, who managed the DeLand Club. He was with Ashland (Ky.) in the Mountain State League where Sammy Gray and Vic Sorrell, former big leaguers, performed along with two rising young stars named Stan Musial and Johnny Beazley. He quit DeLand when Buscher was relieved as manager.

He went as high as Milwaukee in the American Association where he once went in as a reliever in the first inning and won a 4-3 10-inning game against St. Paul. With the Saints were Ben Chapman, Dusty Cooke and Bubbles Hargraves. His mound opponent was a chap named Vernon "Lefty" Gomez. After that they wouldn't start him so he quit to come back to D. C. sandlots where he could pitch regularly.

His local affiliations are many. At one time or another he has played with such locally famous clubs as the Aztecs, Linworths, Northern Redbirds, Heurich Brewers, Erco, St. Mary's Celtics of Alexandria, Cameo, Center Market, Army War College, Mohawks, Fashion Shop, Maryland A.C. just to mention a few.

By all rules and regulations he should be on the sidelines. He has abused his arm with utter disregard of consequences.

There was the time in 1927 with Martinsburg. He reported in the morning and that afternoon pitched and won a twin bill. The next day he went in for a six inning relief stint and won his third game in two days.

As late as three years ago he went down to Norfolk with Cameo and pitched against the Norfolk Naval Training Station club, composed of big-leaguers and pitched two complete games in two days, losing to Maxie Wilson, who later became a Nat, 3-0, and the next day to Johnny Meers, now with the Chicago Cubs, 2-1.

In his 30 years of throwing, "Lefty" estimates he has averaged at least 35 games per year, which would be close to 1000. He is sure he has won over 800 which isn't bad in any league.

Regular Busy-Body Is Fairfax's Bob Mavity; Name the Sport, He's in the Middle of It

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Bob Mavity of Falls Church, Va., is a busy man. In fact, if an election were held to pick the ousiest man in Fairfax County, Bob would win hands down.

Since he moved to Falls Church, six years ago, he has managed to sticks his fingers into just about every sports pie in the county.

He is athletic director at the Fairfax High School, sports editor of The Providence Journay, a county daily, he officiates collegiate and scholastic football, baseball and basketball, and runs his sporting goods store in Falls Church.

Last year, he though that he was running out of work, so he decided to create some new sports projects.

He helped organize the officials of his area into the Northern Virginia Umpires Association, and a few weeks ago, the Nationa Semipro Baseball Congress granted it a charter.

This year, he helped organize the summer high school baseball league, which includes Washington-Lee, Devitt, Mount Vernon and Fairfax. He took over as coach of the Fairfax team. The National Association of High School Athletics granted the league recognition.

He collaborated with Principal S. J. Coffey of Fairfax High in launching a drive to raise $10,000 for a lighting system at the football stadium, and all-around improvement and expansion of athletic facilities at the school. The drive will bear fruit in two weeks when construction begins on the lights.

Bob was a basketball, baseball and football letterman at both Eastern Kentucky State Teachers Colylege and the University of Kentucky. He coached at an Arkansas high school for a year before coming to Fairfax High in 1941. The 33-year old Mavity celebrated his fifth wedding anniversary last Friday. The Mavitys have three children.

Five teams are entered in the annual Old Dominion Boat Club regatta, which begins today at 2 p. m. on the Potomac River off Alexandria.

Argentina Scotches Olympic Feeding

Buenos Aires, July 19 (AP).—Sources close to the Argentine Olympic Committee said today that reports from London that Argentina might offer to feed all athletes competing in the 1948 Olympic Games in the British capital "apparently were based on misinterpretation."

These sources said that up to now the Argentine committee had only considered informally the possibility that the Argentine team might carry all or part of its own food to England in order not to draw on the limited supplies of the British people.

They added, however, that no thought had been given to the possibility of supplying food to competitors from all countries. At the same time, it was emphasized that the Argentine government might, on request from Britain, agree to sell additional foodstuffs but speculation on the matter was described as "premature."

Out Fishing

By Jack Bell

TOMORROW AT 10:30 A.M. more than three score World War II veterans, patients at Walter Reed Hospital, will be guests of the Bowlers Victory Legion of Washington, at a fishing party on Chesapeake Bay.

Arville Ebersole, legion director, announced the caravan will form at Peace Cross in Bladensburg. From there the group will drive to the Rod 'n Reel Club at Chesapeake Beach.

Wesley Stinnet, under director of the Rod 'n Reel Club and the fishing fleet, says: "It will be a busy time for the boys. Croakers are biting in the bay. After the boys eat, our fishing guides will see that the 'vets' fill the ice boxes with fish."

WHEN THE PARTY returns from scattered favorite fishin' 'oles, cash prizes will be awarded to those boating the first and second largest fish. To create competition among the boat captains, similar prizes will go to the captains for their efforts in finding the spots where the largest fish are taken.

According to Ebersole, the party should be the highlight of the fishing season. "This is not our first outing for the vets, nor will it be our last."

It is refreshing to know that interest in hospitalized veterans has revived. Last year, numerous organizations and individuals sponsored trips for the "vets" to the bay. This is the first of the local current season.

Grand Circuit Meet Has $160,000 in Prizes

Our Damsel Beaten by Half Length

Charles Town, W. Va., July 19. The riding of Jockey Sammy Palumbo played an important part in the brilliant triumph of Kitty Kilts, owned by Fred A. Kirsch of Washington, when the pair came home on the front end by a half length in the Palmetto Purse which featured the program of the Charles Town Jockey Club.

Putting forth every ounce of energy in his ancient body down the homestretch, Palumbo drove the daughter of Double Scotch like a mad man to earn the lion's share of the purse over Our Damsel, owned by Wayne Kendrick of Washington. In third position, three lengths further back, came the charging Run Bud Run, the property of Mrs. Samuel M. Pistorio of Baltimore.

Kitty Kilts was clocked in .52 1/5 for the 4½ furlongs which was contested over a racing strip ankle deep in mud. The filly went to the post second choice in the betting and those in the gathering of 7000 who wagered on her chances received $7.20 for each $2 investment.

Started in Fourth

Breaking well at the start, Palumbo, on the extreme outside, was in fourth position while Woody Kirk was rolling along in front with Our Damsel. Bulrushes was a length in front of Roman Boy. Palumbo kept his eyes glued on Roman Boy, notorious for bearing out at the turns, and when the 11-year-old gelding accommodated Palumbo drove Kitty Kilts forward into second place at the far bend.

Down the home stretch Woody Kirk was two in front, but Palumbo never gave up. Pushing, lashing and kicking with all his might, he nailed the pace setter approaching the pay-off line to shove the filly's head in front and win going away by a half length.

Our Damsel, who was bogged down on the inside down the homestretch was three lengths in front of the fast-closing Run Bud Run for second honors.

The 94 fans who selected the "7 and 8" combination in the aily double took down a $154.20 pay off which consisted of Jay Mohr's Doctor's Care and R. E. Clabaugh's Black Bass.

By Three Lengths

Doctor's Care, ridden by Jockey Emelio Carrillo, won the opening event by three lengths after the 5-year-old daughter of Dr. Freeland had lead practically every step of the 4½-furlong journey. She was overlooked in the betting and paid off at $18. The 4-to-5 shot favorite, Famas Time, owned by H. C. Brown and ridden by Jockey Jimmy Baird, was second, while Molbon and Molbon's Camp Chest was two lengths further back in the third slot.

After racing 32 times in two years without a single victory, Black Bass the 11-year-old maiden finally hit the jackpot. Ridden by Eddie Ballenger, the son of Justice F. showed a high flight of speed and assuming command at the club house turn lasted to win by a length. Overlooked in the betting the aged campaigner paid off at $16.

W. C. Bell's Royal Scotch, ridden by Georgie Cardoza, was probably best. The mare went to her knees at the start and Cardoza was lucky to retain his seat. The mare closed with a tremendous burst of speed in the final half mile to finish second, a length back of the winner. In third place came Wardun handled by Baird.

N. L. Football Owners Talk Schedule

Pittsburgh, June 19 (AP).—National Football League club owners meet here tomorrow to weigh Prexy Bert Bell's pet plan for a five-year schedule and to consider injecting a new type of "T" into the professional game—television.

The five-year plan for schedules is the prime topic for discussion among the owners and the word was out that it likely will be adopted, starting with the forthcoming season.

The huddle will encompass television since it affects the owners' pocketbooks. The debate will be whether televised games prospectively are a source of increased income or a handicap in the revenue department on the premise that fans might stay away in inclement weather if they can watch a game in comfort at home.

Another item which will be aired—but probably not publicity—is the competition of the rival All-American Conference. The National League suffered some financial pangs because the All-America forced costs upward last season in bidding for players, many of whom were lured into the new circuit.

The old league got in a backhand slap at its rival yesterday as it named Latrobe, Pa., the "official birthplace" of pro football in America. In return, a committee of Latrobe townspeople promised to regard the National League and its affiliates as the only "official" pro league, a spokesman for Bell said.

Mark N. Funk, head of the committee, said the first pro game, between Latrobe and Jeannette, Pa., teams, was played at Latrobe September 3, 1895, and that Larobe won, 12-0. He said Dr. John Braillier, still a practicing dentist in Latrobe, was the first "confessed paid" player and that Braillier received $10 for a game.

Local Chiefs Off To League Meeting

President George P. Marshall and General Manager Dick McCann will represent the Washington Redskins' interests at the annual midsummer meeting of the National Football League in Pittsburgh today at which Commissioner Bert Bell's plans for a five-year "cycle" schedule will be discussed and possibly adopted.

McCann said legislation on televising games would undoubtedly be left to the discretion of the home clubs as in the case of raio broadcasts. The Redskins, he said, already are formulating plans to televise home games this fall.

Midgets to Hold 50-Lap Race

President Mike Joseph, of the American Racing Drivers' Circuit, last night sanctioned a 50-lap—or 12 and ½ miles—Eastern States championship grind which will be featured on the seven-event midget automobile racing program set for the West Lanham, Md., Speedway Friday night.

This is one of a series of championship races to be sponsored by the Circuit, and will bring the best drivers and fastest cars in the east to Lanham.

Parker Seeded First in Annual Seabright Tennis

Sea Bright, N. J., July 19 (AP).—A field of 32 men and 24 women, representing top-flight net stars of North and South America will compete in the fifty-ninth annual Sea Bright Lawn Tennis Club invitation tourney, which opens Monday.

In the men's division, Frank Parker of Los Angeles, former national champion, is top-seeded, with Gardnar Mulloy of Miami second; Eddie Moylan of San Francisco, Spring Lake victor, third, and Bill Talbert of Wilmington, Del., fourth.

Top-seeded Miss Shirley Fry of Akron, Ohio, last year's winner, will defend her title in the women's division against a group which includes second ranked Mrs. Virginia Kovacs of Los Angeles, and Miss Dorothy Head of Los Angeles, rated No. 3.

Other stars who will compete are Bob Falkenburg, of Beverly Hills, Calif., Sidney Wood of New York City and Seymour Greenberg of Chicago.

Francisco "Pancho" Segura of Ecuador, is seeded first among the foreign entries, followed by Armondo Vieira of Brazil. Vieira, Brazil's singles champion, made his first United States tournament appearance in Spring Lake last week and was eliminated in the quarter-finals.

Officials Selected For K. of C. Horse Show

The following American Horse Show officials will officiate at the Knights of Columbus horse show, Saturday, July 26, at the Meadowbrook show grounds, Chevy Chase, according to Vincent P. Lester, secretary of the show:

Hunter judges, Mrs. Ruth Guitar, Warrenton, Va.; Col. Frederic W. Boye, Washington, D. C.; Forrest L. Ward, Charlottesville, Va.

Jumper judges, Thomas J. Tredden, jr., Washington, D. C., and Otto Furr, Middleburg, Va. Tredden and War will also judge the saddle horse classes.

Statler Team Wins

The Statler defeated the Carlton, 17-7, in a Hotel Softball League game at the Monument Grounds. Frank Geraci and Jack Miller paced the winners. Geraci pounded out a homer and two singles in four trips while Miller collected three safeties in three attempts.

Solunar Tables

By JOHN ALDEN KNIGHT

The schedule of Solunar Periods, as printed below, has been taken from John Alden Knight's SOLUNAR TABLES. Plan your days so that you will be fishing in good territory or hunting in good cover during these times, if you wish to find the best sport that each day has to offer.

The Major Periods are shown in boldface type. These begin at the times shown and last for an hour and a half or two hours thereafter. The Minor Periods, shown in regular type, are of somewhat shorter duration. Use Eastern Standard time.

Stranahan, Ward Gain Western Finals

Toledo Star Rallies to Avert Upset

Des Moines, July 19 (AP).—Frank Stranahan, defending champion from Toledo, Ohio, scrambled from almost certain defeat to advance to the final round of the Western Amateur tournament with a 4-and-3 victory over Thomas Sheehan, Birmingham, Mich., today.

Stranahan's victory, an uphill battle that found him 3 down at the end of the morning round of 18 holes, gave him a spot in tomorrow's championship stretch of 36 holes with Marvin (Bud) Ward, the genial golfer from Spokane, Wash., who defeated Robert (Bob) Willits, Kansas City, 3 and 1, in today's semifinals.

Third Meeting for Them

It will be the third meeting of Stranahan and Ward, who stand all-even for their first two matches. Stranahan defeated Ward 1 up in 36 holes for the Western crown last year and was eliminated by Ward, 2 and 1, in the National Amateur tournament.

Sheehan, swinging blazing-hot light irons and a steady putter, had a 5-up lead at the end of nine holes in the morning round as he made the turn in 31, 5 strokes under par, and finished the round 3 up.

The fighting Irishman, Notre Dame golf captain and national amateur medalist in 1939, lost his touch during the afternoon round and Stranahan had evened the match at the twenty-fourth hole. From that point it was only a matter of time until Stranahan was to close the match with a par five on the long, 482-yard thirty-third hole on Wakonda Country Club's hilly course.

Stranahan Gets Hot

Playing three-under par golf for the second round—four-under for the day—Stranahan didn't lost one of the last 24 holes.

Ward, two-time national and Western amateur champ, had plenty of trouble beating Willits.

Willits manned a sizzling putter in the morning round and held a 2-up lead through the tenth hole but lost his touch on the eleventh where he missed a 2½-footer.

Ward squared the match with a birdie on the 340-yard twelfth with an eight-foot putt and was never down again.

Baltimore Yachting Won by Sue Island

Middle River, Md., July 19 (AP).—The Sue Island Power Squadron carried off the team trophy in the Fifth District's annual navigators contests sponsored today by the Baltimore Yacht Club.

Second place was taken by the Patapsco Power Squadron which was 197 seconds off its mark. The other teams finished as follows: Wilmington, Del., 291 seconds off; Delaware River Squadron, 414 seconds; Annapolis Power Squadron, 517; Absecon Island, N. J., 872.

The Absecon accomplishment won for it the Sour Puss trophy.

Annapolis Sailing Won By Restless

Annapolis, Md., July 19 (AP).—The Naval Academy yacht squadron's sleek yawl, Restless, negitiated a triangular 12½-mile course in 2.21:10 today to come off with top honors in the Annapolis Sailing Club's first sanctioned regatta.

The fleet vessel, skippered by Comdr. Ben Field, bucked stiff southerly winds to go under the gun just 20 seconds ahead of Elle II, flying the home club colors and piloted by Emory C. Rice. Corrected time for the Elle II was 2.25:53.

Completing the course in 2.40:10, the Nanest, owned by John D. Lang of Baltimore, defeated the only other class boat to finish, Kenneth B. Marty's Marionette.

First place in the delta division went to the OMA, representing the Patapskut Sailing Association. William G. Tyler Brought the craft in with a corrected time of 2.31:38 to best the other delta division entry, Lover, owned by H. Erich Nietsch of the Annapolis Yacht Club.

New Jersey Skippers Lead 2-Day Regatta

Annapolis, Md., July 19 (AP).—New Jersey skippers had a lock on both the Comet and Star divisions at the end of the first two or three heats in the Gibson Island Yacht squadron's two-day regatta.

Garden State Comets placed one-two-three in their division. All of them from the Red Dragon Canoe Club at Edgewater Beach.

Owen P. Merrill in his Barfly was first with 69½ points by virtue of wins in both of today's heats. Philip A. Somerville's Triple Scotch was second with 63 points and John C. Rogers' Shufly third with 58 points.

The winner after a third heat tomorrow will be awarded the Gibson Island Challenge Cup and unofficial title of Chesapeake Bay champion.

In the lead for the Star championship and the Roulon Miller, Jr., Memorial Trophy, was Robert L. Lippincott and his Blue Star II from the Riverton, N. J., Yacht Club.

Stymie Takes Big Gold Cup Race by Head

glasses as he sat tight, McCreary appeared to have little interest in the race, although Stymie's neck was bent by the power of the jockey's hold.

It was not until the far turn that the front runner began to "come back to," as the railbirds say, to the field.

Assault, roused by Arcaro, began to move. Stymie was full of run. Phalanx showed signs of life as the forward horses, apparently as lively as ever, were losing their long advantage.

Approaching the stretch, it looked like anybody's horse race, with the possible exception of the sluggish Talon.

Endeavour Becomes Second

Natchez still held the lead, but few in the crowd expected him to stay there for 20 more strides. Endeavour forged into second position as Ensueno began to wilt. Assault and Stymie came on and Phalanx reponded to driving tactics.

In the early straightaway, Assault looked like the odds-on favorite the crowd had installed him. He was all horse but not for long. He began to tire as Natchez, with Atkinson pumping like a little madman, clung to the lead.

With Assault finally finding a route that did not suit, the crowd looked for another challenger of Natchez and it was Stymie.

The one time selling plater, claimed by the Jacobs from Assault's own King Ranch for $1500, was responding to the cadence of McCreary's desperate riding. Twenty yards from the wire it appeared that Natchez, the pacemaker who was supposed to stop, wouldn't be beat today.

But those of this belief hadn't reckoned with old Stymie. He seemed to sense the work at hand.

Even the Assault bettors, who thought he was a cinch, turned Stymie rooters in that final mighty effort of the 6-year-old.

On, on and on he came, with most of the fans grunting with him. The tip of his nose gradually crept up the side of Natchez' frame. He was at his rival's saddle cloth with the finish line a jump away.

He took that last stride—and he made it . . . A bare head, yes, but it was as good as a mile. Stymie was home.

Sure they took a photo, but those near the line knew there was never a doubt as to who won.

Mac's Second Big Thrill

McCreary, the little sawed-off fellow of the saddle, puffed out these words as he dismounted: "My second greatest thrill. You know I won a Kentucky Derby."

Atkinson said: "I thought I was home free. I didn't have any excuses. Natchez really was something today."

Arcaro said: "It might have been a little too far for Assault."

Ruperto Donozo said: "Phalanx showed me some move but was sprawling in the going."

Artigas said: "Endeavour II, he meet a wee bit of trouble at top of stretch but maybe he not like track."

Irigoyen said: "Ensueno is much better than he showed today."

Mrs. Joe Blow said: "Phooey on this international stuff. Who do you like in the next at Charles Town?"

GOLD CUP NOTES: A New York writer was kidding me about just getting in from Charles Town. He asked, "Are those pigs down there still beating each other?" I replied, "They are a little more formful than Short Reward, $49 winner your second race, who had never been better than tenth before in his life." . . . Speaking of Charles Town, Jockey Harold Allgaier, who rode Talon in the Cup race, started out at the West Virginia track . . . Eddie Arcaro demonstrated that he was ready for horsebacking on Assault by winning the third race aboard C. V. Whitney's Daily Dip, a stablemate of Phalanx . . . In the same race, Jockey Juan Pedro Artigas, the first rider to be allowed all three names on a program, got the feel of the slippery oval aboard Tlemcen, a South American stablemate of Endeavour II . . . The fourth race brought a Washington slant when Gustave Ring of our town saw his Lord Grillo run second . . . The Gold Cup drew the largest gathering of sports writers since the Kentucky Derby . . . W. L. Brann's Gallorette was scratched and I lost some rooting interest in the big race. Wanted to see Trainer Ed Christmas, of the Marlboro Christmases, have a crack at the top dough. However, the Brann mare was withdrawn at his command due to the off track . . . Fred Capossela, the announcer over the P. A. here, got his start airing the jai alai games at Miami. He inherited his present job from Bryan Field and imitates Bryan so well he sounds more like Field than Field himself . . . Small world, isn't it? Yesterday Palumbo, today Arcaro.

Virginia's Racers Dominate Program

Cambridge, Md., July 19 (AP).—Virginia racers dominated the preliminary events for the Eastern Seaboard championship among Hampton one design sloops today with Jack Balie of Norfolk setting the pace by winning both heats.

Baile skippered his 18-foot Rebel home first in the morning 2½-mile test in 56.7 minutes. He repeated his victory in the afternoon five-mile race in 2 hours, 15 minutes, 15 seconds.

The two wins gave Bailey 70 points toward the championship and the Admiral Richard E. Byrd trophy. The final heat tomorrow will be over a five-mile course.

Memorial Swim At Takoma Friday

Banks Await Ruling in D. C. Tax Appeal

Seven local banks are awaiting results of tax appeals which may cost them or the District about $100,000.

The appeals, heard by Lawrence Koenigsberger, District tax official, are based on interpretations of the District tax law. They involve 1945 returns.

The seven banks maintain they are "savings banks" and should pay a 4 per cent rather than a 6 per cent tax on gross earnings. They also seek deductions based on interest paid depositors under a 1904 congressional act and other deductions.

The banks involved are the McLachlen Banking Corp., Citizens Bank of Washington (case not yet heard), Anacostia Bank, Industrial Bank of Washington, Bank of Commerce and Savings, Security Savings and Commercial Bank and City Bank.

These banks and seven more also have appealed to the District Board of Tax Appeals on 1946 and 1947 tax returns, declaring that when the District corporation counsel ruled against certain deductions, it, in effect, defined gross earnings as gross receipts. None of the latter cases has been heard.

The seven additional banks involved are: Riggs National, Second National, Columbia National, National Savings & Trust Co., Liberty National, Union Trust and Hamilton.

3-Hour Session Granted by Senate On Naval Airfield

By The Associated Press

The Senate Armed Services Committee has set aside three hours next week for consideration of a bill to authorize the construction of a Naval Academy airfield in Anne Arundel County, Md.

Chairman Gurney (R., S. Dak.) said a hearing will be held at 10 a. m. (Eastern daylight time), Wednesday, and that those in favor of the airfield and those opposed to it will be given an hour and a half each to present their views. He said more time cannot be granted because of hoped-for adjournment on July 26.

"Those favoring and those opposing the building of the Naval Academy airfield should agree among themselves, prior to the meeting, who their spokesmen shall be and the amount of time to be awarded to each person who speaks,' Gurney's announcement said.

War Heroes Open 57th Convention In Baltimore

Baltimore, July 19 (AP).—The Nation's war heroes met here tonight at the opening of the fifth-seventh annual convention of the Army and Navy Legion of Valor—one of the world's most exclusive veterans' groups.

Membership is limited to men who have been awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor—highest United States award for heroism—the Distinguished Service Cross and the Navy Cross.

Col. James P. S. Devereux, of Chevy Chase, Md., Wake Island commander when the Japs struck in 1942, is among the 200 delegates attending the reunion. The five-day meeting will be the first large-scale reunion of World War II heroes, Committeeman A. Carroll Jones announced.

Virginian to Head Presbyterian Council

Montreat, N. C., July 19 (AP).—Everett L. Repass of Salem, Va., was elected president of the Assemblymen's Council of the Presbyterian Church in the United States at the annual session of the council here today.

Others elected include: T. T. Kopplin, Oklahoma City, vice president; Roy Klein, Sherman, Tex., and A. Walton Litz, Little Rock, Ark., synod council representatives; the Rev. Hugh Hamilton, Gaffney, S. C., and J. H. Harper, Somerset, Ky., representatives from religious education committees in synods.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, July 19 (AP).—A good demand developed for wheat on the Board of Trade today following trade advices that the Commodity Credit Corp. was inquiring for grain in the Southwest. Prices advanced nearly 5 cents and feed grains joined the upswing.

Mill buying was noticeable in the wheat pit, indicating a good flour business. Cool weather in the Midwest aided corn as analysts felt warm weather was needed to spur the crop, already a week or more late.

Oats rose with other grains, aided by a strong demand for choice grades in the spot market. [illegible]

Baltimorean Injured In Plane Recovers

A Baltimore man who gave his son and daughter a ride in a rented plane Friday night was recovering yesterday from minor injuries sustained when the plane hit a high-tension wire in landing on the Clarence Gore farm in Culpeper, Va.

The father, John Edward Utz of Baltimore, received cuts on the head, face and elbow. His son, David, 11, and daughter, Beverly 10, were uninjured. The plane, which was rented from the Congresional Airport in Rockville, was only slightly damaged, State Police at Culpeper said yesterday.

Destroyer Rushes Aid To Woman Ill on Liner

Halifax, N. S., July 19 (AP).—The Canadian destroyer Nootka steamed out of here tonight with two surgeons aboard to meet the French liner De Grasse which reported earlier a woman passenger was suffering acute internal hemorrhages.

The 18,000-ton lnier was 500 miles from here when she first wirelessed and the destroyer was expected to reach her side about noon tomorrow. The liner is bound for New York from Le Havre.

Response to Offering of World Bank Bonds Called 'Terrific'; Issue Sells Out in Few Hours

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

New Turn of Inflation Wheel

For persons who were preaching recession, the easy course now is to say that the John L. Lewis-Benjamin Fairless coal wage pact changed things; that by granting the miners a 31-cent-an-hour wage increase, the coal operators gave inflation another shot in the arm. That's too easy an out.

Livingston

The wage compact was a direct outgrowth of the seller's market already existing. The steel mills are booked solid with orders for months. The world wants United States coal and machinery, as well as farm products.

The steel industry wanted to keep the business ball rolling. Hence the settlement. It was an acknowledgment that the durable-goods industries—automobiles, farm machinery, industrial equipment, and household appliances—were still fresh oxen in an economy whose soft-goods industries had shown signs of fatigue.

The result was an immediate rise in the price of coal at the mines, followed by a jump in the price of pig iron. Steel scrap advanced to $38 a ton at Buffalo, not far from its recent peak of $41. Yet only a few weeks ago, scrap sold at $32. That's how fast sentiment can turn around.

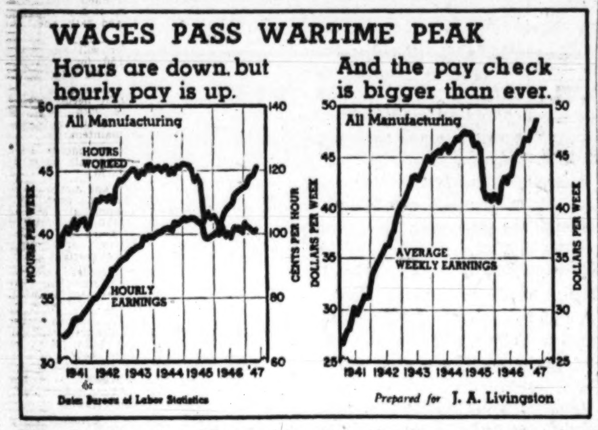
Comeback in Cotton

Ditto in cotton. It sold at 39.4 cents a pound. Yet nine months ago, it fell out of bed—from 39 cents in October to 28 cents in November. This seems to be the price pattern. A commodity will break, then push up to a new top. Wheat, corn and other agricultural commodities have been similarly strong. World demand clearly dominates the United States price level.

What has happened in the last few months accords with classical business-cycle theory. In the past, if Birmingham, Pittsburgh and Buffalo were busy, if capital goods were in demand, then retail volume took care of itself. That, however, was before the advent of John Maynard Keynes and his disciples. They brought forth on this continent a new theory: Purchasing Power. And it has greatly influenced economic thought and business analysis ever since Roosevelt.

As prices rose this time, the idea grew that consumers would be priced out of the market. And when a series of isolated recessions occurred in furs, comic books, jewelry, liquor, toys and so on, the purchasing power theory seemed to be validated. Yet these setbacks did not set off the expected chain reaction.

Buyers were merely shifting purchases—from goods which had been available to goods which were just coming onto the market.



They bought automobiles, refrigerators, furniture and other hard goods and thus had less left for the purchase of soft goods. That would explain why department store executives have tended to be cautious. As Edwin I. Marks, chairman of R. H. Macy's executive committee, noted last week, dollar sales next month may fall below a year ago. Actual volume already is below last year.

Great Farm Market

In the great Midwest, sales float along on a riptide of farm income. Never before has the farm market been so attractive to salesmen—not only for agricultural implements and automobiles, but also for household equipment of all types. And it's not done on credit. The farmers are paying cash on the line for the most part. They don't all have checking accounts. But all seem to have big rolls of bills.

Profits show no sign of recession. Six-month earnings reports are breath-taking. St. Regis Paper's income rose to $1.40 a share from 32 cents in the first half of 1946. Johns-Manville's net was up to $1.78 a share as against 25 cents; National Cash Register to $3.08 from 16 cents; A. E. Staley Mfg. to $7.31 from $2.36. You rub your eyes and say, "This is where I came in." It seems too good to be true, too much like 1929: Steel mills booming, farm prices soaring, profits jumping and optimism rampant.

The coal wage settlement gave the inflation wheel another crank. Wages, already at an all-time high (see chart) will go still higher—as other labor leaders copy Lewis. Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers Union (CIO), for example. In May he said he probably would not seek a wage boost at the end of this month. Now, says he, because of the higher cost of living, he'll probably have to. He can argue that the coal increase establishes a new pattern. And probably will.

What it all adds up to is this: The 1947 recession has not come off. Nor is it likely to till fall, if then. Inflationary pressures have been too great. But when the readjustment comes it will come from a higher price level. Look out. The trend of exports—can foreigners get dollars to buy United States goods?—will be the critical factor when its starts. This is essentially a foreign-demand boom—powerfully supported by the high demand for durable goods at home.

New Chapter Added To Finance History; Turnover Is Heavy

New York, July 19 (AP).—The World Bank added a new chapter to the history of international finance this week with the public sale of 250 million dollars of its bonds.

The response of the investors, said a spokesman for the bank at the weekend, was "terrific."

On Tuesday the bank climaxed weeks of intensive preparation by distribution to some 1600 dealers throughout the Nation of 150 million dollars of 25-year bonds with a 3 per cent coupon and 100 million dollars of 10-year bonds with a 2¼ per cent coupon.

At noon the same day, E. F. Dunstan, marketing director, announced heavy over-subscription.

Each issue was sold to dealers at par, or 100, with the proviso they would sell to their customers at that price. Dealers were allowed a sales concession of $2.50 for each 10-year bond sold and $5 for each 25-year bond.

Command Premiums

Trading in the bonds also started Tuesday on the New York Stock Exchange on a when-issued basis. Both issues immediately commanded substantial premiums over the offering price.

The long-terms closed Friday at 102 10/32, after topping 103 earlier in the week, and the short-terms at 101 12/32, after getting up to around 102. Heavy turnover was reported on the exchange but there were indications of even more activity in the over-the-counter market.

Bond dealers interpreted the fluctuations in price during the week largely as indications of speculative activity. A considerable part of trading was done in small lots, a sign that the big investors such as banks, insurance companies and estates had not yet entered the market on a large scale. Such institutional investors usually deal in six-figure blocks of bonds or more.

To Be Used for Loans

Proceeds of the loan will be used by the international banking institution to make dollar loans to member nations. The bank's supply of lendable dollars, prior to the bond sale, was confined chiefly to the United States' subscription of around 721 million dollars. That amount was reduced by the bank's first, and thus far only, loan of 250 million dollars to France.

Consideration is being given, officials indicated, to applications for loans by several other European nations, among them Denmark, Poland and the Netherlands.

The bank is pledged, under its articles of agreement, to use its funds to assist in the reconstruction and development of nations, especially those whose economies were damaged or destroyed by war.

Intense interest in the new securities relegated the corporate list to second place in the bond market.

Turnover in the popular rails was small but prices tended upward throughout the week. Bidding was stimulated in large part by hopes that several requests for higher freight and passenger rates would go through, as well as earnings reports for many carriers which showed decisive improvement over a year ago.

Stocks Drop After 8 Weeks Of Recovery

By Victor Eubank

New York, July 19 (AP).—The stock market stumbled during the past week after one of the most substantial two-months' recoveries in a long time. Bonds trailed with shares to a lesser degree, while commodities soared and relapsed at intervals.

Monday was the best day for the stock division, with activity the most pronounced of the week. Buying and short covering were credited mainly to rising inflationary psychology based on the wage-price spiral. From then until Friday the course was downward as speculation contingents cashed in on the idea that the lengthy upswing called for a sizable technical correction. Dividends and earnings still were helpful, but waning tax hopes, in addition to doubts regarding business and international affairs, chilled sentiment.

On the week the Associated Press 60-stock composite showed a net decline of .1 of a point at 67.2, first drop since the sharply slumping period concluded May 17. The comeback started from that date and, with scattered interruptions, the overall index climbed 9.2 points up to last Monday, or, in terms of quoted values, about nine billion dollars. In the 40 sessions from the May low, which was bottom since January 25, 1945, there were only 10 moderate declines. The industrial average in the same strech was up 12.7 points and on Monday reached a new high since last August.

Volume Is Lower

Volume for the week of 5,938,973 shares compared with 6,096,789 the week before, which was a top since the six-day period of May 24.

Rails pushed up Monday on hopes of passenger and freight rate boosts, with steels, motors, oils and special industrials following. A number of extra and increased disbursements spurred individual favorites. Turnover was 1,660,000 shares, largest since May 19. Selling in the final hour cut gains. It was the broadest market since October 9 with 1077 issues appearing. A Stock Exchange seat was transferred for $66,000, up $2000 from a previous transaction at a high since March 11.

Losers Prevail at Close

While a number of pivotals continued to record peaks for the year or longer in the Tuesday proceedings, losers prevailed at the close. The pace slowed to 1,180,000 shares. Offerings again reduced leaders moderately Wednesday on 1,070,000 shares. Liquidation was more urgent Thursday, but dealings held to 1,110,000 shares. The day's average dip of .5 of a point was the widest since July 9. Declines ranged from 1 to 4 points.

In the concluding session the direction was cloudy until the final hour when oils, motors, rails and special issues were given a runup. Turnover dwindled to 920,000 shares, a bottom since June 30. The tax bill veto and subsequent congressional action were said to have been pretty well discounted marketwise. One of the reasons for the market bulge of the past several weeks was seen in the disclosure that the Stock Exchange short interest as of July 15 was reduced to 1,418,302 shares from 1,539,638 on June 17, largest decrease since June, 1946.

Northeast Assets Rise in Year

Shareholders of the Northeast Building Association were told yesterday that assets had risen more than $600,000 in the year, bringing the total t oa new high of $5,813,000.

Secretary Raymond C. Williams made the report at a meeting here in which the following officers were reelected: James L. Sherwood, chairman; Schuyler S. Symons, president; Wiliam S. Torbert, Henry C. Althoff and Julian F. Belfield, vice presidents; Williams, secretary; Jack Riley, treasurer; and Edith Y. Gouge, assistant secretary-treasurer. Officer personnel reappointed were: Samuel W. Fry, jr., Anna Fletcher and Virginia H. Groff.

Directors reelected were the officers and Alfred L. Foster, Roy L. Swenson, Rudolph J. Boehs, John B. Rubino, Dwight L. Myers, Eppa L. Norris and Joseph E. Bruno.

1948 Auto Prices Due To Go Higher

Detroit, July 19 (AP).— Most 1948 model passenger automobiles are likely to be higher in price.

Many industry authorities assert that increased labor and materials costs and outlay for tools and other equipment to produce the new models will make it impossible to hold the present prices.

Some features, such as automatic drive and gearshift, the car buyer may buy or leave as he chooses.

Few car makers believe higher prices will cut orders. Currently demand is greater than it has been at any time since the end of the war.

Automotive circles believe Buick and Pontiac will have automatic gearshift and transmissions as optional equipment.

Passenger car and truck production in the United States and Canada this week was estimated today by Ward's Automotive Reports at 102,630 units. A revised estimate placed last week's output at 90,075 vehicles.

Output for the third week of July, 1946, totaled 80,985 units.

"Next week is expected to see production drop to approximately 76,000 because of the announced suspension of nearly all General Motors passenger car manufacturing," the Ward survey said. "This loss, coupled with Ford's failure to achieve its planned output level, reduces the indicated total for the month from the 440,000 forecast made early in the month to a new projected figure of 388,000."

B. & O. Places Orders For 3000 Hopper Cars

Baltimore, July 19 (AP).—The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad announced today it had placed orders for 1500 70-ton hopper cars to be built by the Pullman Car and Manufacturing Co., 1000 50-ton hoppers to be built by the Bethlehem Steel Co. and 500 70-ton covered cement hoppers to be built by the Greenville Steel Car Co. of Greenville, Pa.

Deliveries will start in December and by April 1 the B. & O. hopes to be operating all of the 11,500 new freight cars it now has on order.

ARE YOU DRIVING THROUGH ROCK CREEK PARK TODAY?

If so do stop by this development of beautifully planned and built to order homes. There are many choice sites still available, and discriminating Washingtonians are selecting their homesites now. Others have already chosen and are on their construction of the home they dreamed of during the war. This is a restricted development, immediately adjacent to the park with all the coolness and verdant shade of that favorable spot. If you wish for more particulars call on our representative at 6814 Oregon ave., or our office.

Directions: Drive out Nebraska ave., to Oregon ave., then through property.

BEAUTIFUL LOTS
100x170 Feet
$750

If you are looking for a lovely homesite—a place well situated with beautiful trees, and room for flowers, and a place where the kiddies can romp and play and still have such indispensable city conveniences as city water, electric, telephone, mail service, train and bus connections, then come out to Lanham Park, one of Prince Georges County's fastest growing communities—where you can still get nearly half an acre of land for $750, with convenient terms if you prefer so that you can pay for your lot in small monthly payments.

Come out and look around. There is no obligation to buy—but we promise you will be impressed with the values offered and the activity here in Lanham Park.

Directions: Bladensburg Rd. to Peace Cross, turn right, out Defense Highway 4½ miles to Pennsylvania Railroad overpass, cross overpass, continue ½ mile to large sign, "Lanham Park," at office on left side of Defense Highway.

Willows Beach Colony

Careful buyers, those who have checked and compared, are selecting summer homesites at this restricted development now. Willows Colony is next to Breezy Point on Chesapeake Bay, and is 42 miles from the White House (35 miles from D. C. line). There is nearly a mile of wide, white sand beach, affording safe bathing for children. Willows is one of the best fishing grounds on the bay. All sites at Willows are large, many wooded, with fine views of the bay. Prices start at $500. Many bay view sites at $1,200 and less; wooded waterfront sites from $1,800. Generous long-term payments arranged, 20 per cent cash required. We can build your home at Willows now. Builders and materials are available. Inquire at sales office for terms and building plans. Building plans at Willows must be approved; all applicants to purchase are fully investigated. There is nothing on Chesapeake Bay to compare with what we have to offer. Representatives always on the property. To reach: Drive to Marlboro, then follow Route 4, 416 and 260 to Chesapeake Beach, turn right there on Bay Shore rd., 5 miles south to entrance sign, or Phone HO. 8235 for map.

Works at Goodwife Role

Eva's Past Given Peroxide Rinse Along With Hair

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

EVITA, "Little Eva," wife of Argentina's President, has made front-page news since she left home on a super-duper good-will jaunt. Around Washington quite a few of Argentina's "oligarquia" (social swells) have interesting tales to tell.

EVA PERON

They say that, down in Argentina, Evita is informally billed in a Mary Magdalene role—the woman who went wrong, repented and became a saint. Once a brunette, she's now a honey blonde and her character has changed accordingly.

Born near the dusty town of Junin, in the Argentine's hot, northern corn country, she's made her way, they say, by wit and physical charm. She carried her family along and after becoming "First Lady," her widowed mother was induced to marry her long-time beau. Now step-papa is sitting pretty in a government job.

Evita works hard at the goodwife role, too. To rest up, they have a small "retiro" outside Buenos Aires, where Evita personally does the cooking. She goes along, too, to an office and is making real progress in liberalizing her country women—trying to get them the vote and divorce privileges.

The "oligarquia" ignore her—which isn't as unusual as it sounds since the President's wife has never cut much social ice. So Evita sticks to her oldtime friends.

Her visit to the Pope wasn't as odd, either, as it reads in print. There are over 500,000 Italians in Buenos Aires alone and Argentina is one of the few countries where religious training is obligatory in the schools. Besides, Argentina has been contributing around $250,000 monthly to Italian relief.

All those jewels, all those furs which deck curvaceous Evita are partly advertisements, partly gifts from political friends.

Peron, by the way, was left a small estancia (ranch) by his father and during an active life has managed to make money.

The biggest hitch in Evita's activities, according to local Argentinos, is that she has deliberately fostered class feeling in a country where such ideas were practically nonexistent.

There are lots of naughty stories aimed at Evita. One recounts how an elevator operator called her a mean name. The elevator's other occupant, an elderly officer, soothed her. "You mustn't get mad," he said. "I've been retired for years, but I'm still called a general!"

Capital Footnotes

ON hot nights Congresswoman Helen Gahagen Douglas wears jewel-studded silver sandals, her toenails lacquered deepest red . . . The Turkish Ambassador has some wonderful deep toast-colored suede oxfords. The Ambassador's a bachelor, a most unusual marital status for a Turk. When asked why he hadn't married, he retorted succinctly: "I've fought five wars. I haven't had time!"

Incidental Intelligence

THERE'S a rash of miniature French poodles around town. Only drawback to these lovable pooches is upkeep. Poodles should be trimmed every three weeks. It costs anywhere from $3 to $7—strictly according to your vet's social standing. Best clipper-upper has amateur standing. She's Claude James, older daughter of New York Times' exuberant managing editor, "Jimmy" James. Claude is in Washington real estate, but on the side she manicures a select group of poodles. Her own pet is a giant and when freshly laundered, whiter-than-all-driven-snow rolled together.

'Cloak' and 'Dagger'

THAT bright red jeep with "St. Richard's Manor" painted on its side in big white letters, belongs to Maynard Barnes, our recently returned Minister to Bulgaria. The Manor is the Barnes' farm in St. Marys County, Md. The two brunette dachshunds lolling on the front seat are called, respectively, Cloak and Dagger—nicknames for the OSS operators who trickled through the war-torn Balkans with such hair-raising results.

From Copenhagen comes news that a second son was born to Mrs. Josiah Marvel, wife of our Ambassador to Denmark. Mrs. Marvel, the glamorous Gee Hopkins, titian-haired ornament of Philadelphia's Main Line, was first married to Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney. Her present husband was a bigshot in Delaware's Democratic Party . . . Latest gag for Congressmen and others exposed to grafters with hard luck stories, is a black-bordered visiting card. On it, printed in capitals, is, "YOUR STORY HAS TOUCHED MY HEART." In smaller type: "Never before have I met anyone with more trouble than you have. Please accept this expression of my sincere sympathy" . . .

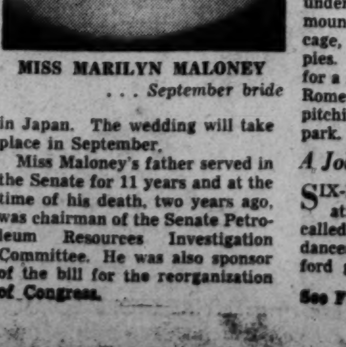
The Charles Lindberghs have been out of the news for eons. Last year they bought waterfront property on Contentment Island, Darien, Conn. The place was houseless, building materials impossible to find, so they rented a house a mile away, parked a huge trailer near their private beach. Weekdays, Lindbergh works in Bridgeport and Anne characteristically bicycles, not drives, to the trailer and writes. Weekends, they and the kids camp out in the trailer, return to the real house only to sleep. They live in splendid isolation, avoiding neighbors and other such social pitfalls.

Miss Maloney, Mr. Crafton Planning September Wedding

OF INTEREST to Washington is the announcement of the engagement of Miss Marilyn Maloney, daughter of Mrs. Francis Maloney of Meridan, Conn., and the late Senator Maloney, to Patrick H. Crafton, son of Col. and Mrs. Denham B. Crafton of Oakland, Calif.

Miss Maloney was graduated from Trinity College, Washington, and attended the School of Fine Arts, Yale University. She was in Europe last year as an actress with the Special Service Forces of the War Department.

Mr. Crafton is a graduate of the School of Foreign Service, Georgetown University, and is now director at WRGB, the General Electric Television Station in Schenectady, N. Y. He is a member of Delta Phi Epsilon and Pi Gamma Mu fraternities. During the war the prospective bridegroom served as a major on the General Staff Corps. He was trained at the Tank Destroyer School, Military Intelligence Training Center, and the Command and General Staff School. A representative for Intelligence on the staff of the commander, Amphibious Forces Pacific, he participated in the Leyte and Okinawa campaigns and was a member of the Occupation Forces in Japan. The wedding will take place in September.



MISS MARILYN MALONEY
. . . September bride

Miss Maloney's father served in the Senate for 11 years and at the time of his death, two years ago, was chairman of the Senate Petroleum Resources Investigation Committee. He was also sponsor of the bill for the reorganization of Congress.

Summer Cyclists

WASHINGTON as a summer resort is all right with the young set. If they're not sailing the Potomac they are likely to be pedaling around the river's edge. And it's much more fun if it's a "bicycle built for two!" The college group, home for summer holiday, has made the willow-shaded walks bordering the river a favorite spot for sports.

Champagne Fiesta

"FATHER and Son Friendship Fiesta" was the way Capt. and Mrs. Harry E. Zuver and their son, Werth, sent out invitations for their supper and ball held last evening at the Carlton.

The party was held to toast the friends young Werth had made in Congress, while serving there as a Senate page. Next Saturday he will leave for Europe, where he will attend junior college to prepare further for a Government career.

Bright flowers bordered the note paper and in varicolored inks to match was written: "Presailing farewell for a few tried and true friends, as an attestation of devotion for unfaltering loyalties and gracious goodwill."

Guests of honor were Senator and Mrs. Albert Hawkes, U. N. delegate and former Senator and Mrs. Warren Austin; Senator Scott Lucas, Senator Forrest Donnell, Senator Edwin C. Johnson, Representative Clarence Brown, Representative Evan Howell, Mr. and Mrs. Roger Whiteford and Leslie Biffle.

Fiesta Parade

ROGER WHITEFORD was master of ceremonies for the "Big Little Show" put on by Werth and his sister, Angela. Dressed in appropriate costumes, they also took part in the Parade of Nations' fiesta with Miss Anne Revercomb, Doyle Rogers, Senorita Teresa Baralbar, Senoritas Linda and "Cookie" Kadala, Carlos and Raoul Vonbecke. They danced the spirited Mexican hat dance, and, in masks and veils, the Chiapanicas or "Love-to-Louise," dedicated to Louise Hawkes Padalford of California.

Guests arriving at 9 were greeted by the hosts, with Mrs. Zuver in a filmy black gown and wearing a handsome platinum necklace of amethyst and pearls. At the signal for supper, Jack Morton and his strolling troubadours played lilting Spanish and Oriental tunes; myriads of candles glowed from small tables and gaily colored balloons and serpentine confetti floated from the ceiling.

Glasses touched over the champagne fountain, and Werth, with his sister, sang "I'll See You Again." The final skit showed the Zuvers abroad, staggering under 35 golf bags, kodaks, mountains of luggage, a bird cage, a cocker with three puppies. They were shown begging for a suite with balcony in Paris, Rome and Madrid, but finally pitching Boy Scout tents in the park.

A Jolly Good Time

SIX-FOOT-SEVEN Representative Lowell Stockman called the tunes for the square dances; "Jolly" Roger Whiteford gave his special songs ac-

Bishop Dun Officiates at Son's Wedding

IN the village church of Heath, Mass., at 3 p. m. yesterday, Capt. Alan A. Dun, younger son of the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, Bishop of Washington, and Mrs. Dun, took as his bride, Miss Sara Fitz-Gerell-Rich. Both the bride and bridegroom came from San Antonio, Tex., to be married by the Bishop at the Dun summer home.

The bride wore a simple dress of white puffed chiffon and her veil fell from a wreath of white sweet peas. She carried a shower bouquet of matching flowers. Her maid of honor, Miss Marjorie Clapp of San Antonio, was costumed in powder blue and carried deep orange tiger lilies. The Rev. Angus Dun, jr., rector of Christ Church, Hamilton, Mass., served his brother as best man. Ushers were the bridegroom's cousins, Howard Whittier Barnard, James Kingman Dun, Peter Lincoln and the Rev. Henry Wolf.

The village of Heath lies in the Berkshire Hills near Williamstown, north of Lenox and Stockbridge. It was settled by the family of Howard Chandler Robbins, former dean of New York Cathedral, who served some months as rector of St. John's Church, Lafayette

Diplomatic Circling

Venezuelan Midshipmen To Be Feted

By Elizabeth Maguire

IN the cool garden of the Venezuelan Embassy this evening 136 cadets from transport ship Capana will be entertained at a reception. The midshipmen are from the Venezuela Naval School and have been stationed on their ship at Norfolk for several weeks. Girls of comparable age from Washington's diplomatic families will be on hand at the reception to partake of light refreshments and conversation from 7 to 9.

The younger generation was feted last Tuesday, when the wife of the Uruguayan Minister, Senora de Mora, gave a birthday party for her daughter Suzana. Pink bows on her pigtails, the senorita celebrated her tenth anniversary in the company of other diplomatic daughters. Her little friend, Marelys Belt, daughter of the Cuban Ambassador, entertained for them with a dance. Other guests included daughters of the Mexican Ambassador, the Argentine Ambassadore and the Minister of Peru.

THE Yemeni Prince was unable to receive his guests at the party he gave at Blair House Thursday afternoon, because of illness. After apologies had been made for his absence, he appeared smiling cordially and had a long chat with his many new friends. Apparently the royal visitor was temporarily ex-

Palm Beach Pioneer

Rep. Frances Bolton Helped Settle Resort

By Marie McNair

REPRESENTATIVE Frances Bolton of Ohio, can boast of being one of Palm Beach's oldest inhabitants.

Long before the Florida resort achieved its name and fame as a millionaire's playground, Mrs. Bolton had built a house there. She will go to this Spanish type villa with its walled garden as soon as Congress closes.

It was Mrs. Frances Bingham Bolton's father who discovered Palm Beach for his family and built a house a few miles below the town. He bought a wide tract of ocean front property and one day said to his daughtsr, "I'm giving you a fortune." He forthwith handed over the deed to the grounds adjoining his own.

Was a Jungle Then

AT THAT time it was jungle with a stretch of beach its only redeeming feature. Mr. Bingham's daughter was skeptical. But the jungle was cleared, a house was built, a garden made. Today she has her own private beach, a cabana and a yacht—all at her front door.

The house she calls Casa Apava, the boat Casita Apavita. And apava is now a household word.

The naming of the Bolton estate was Mrs. Bolton's project. She found the word "apava" in her sanskrit dictionary. It means "he who sports in the water." The apava has taken definite shape in the form of a dragon-like creature which was designed by the architect of the place and is being used as a decorative motif throughout the house.

Holiday to Be Short

MRS. Bolton's Florida holiday will be of short duration. As a member of the Foreign Relations Committee of the House, she is on the subcommittee going abroad this summer to visit Cairo, Libya, Ethiopia and other African countries.

Franchester Place in Lyndhurst, Mrs. Bolton's Ohio home, combines the names Frances and Chester, the latter the late Representative Bolton whose seat in Congress was taken by his wife.

In Washington she lives in a charming home on Wyoming ave., which is filled with a collection of jades and other bibelots picked up in her travels around the world. There's a garden at the back of the house a city block long, floodlighted for outdoor parties and shaded with towering trees.

When Mrs. Bolton moved in, her first thought was to fix up the garden. She ordered topsoil and turf, plants and flowering shrubs. But she wondered why none of her neighbors came to call. She was to learn the reason some years later. They were all furious because their topsoil ordered from the same landscaper had been given instead to Mrs. Bolton.

Open Spaces Call

NEW MEXICO'S new Representative, Georgia Lusk, is counting the days until she can get home to Senta Fe to ride the wide open spaces, to fish the brooks for trout. But first she'll go to visit her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Virgil Lusk, widow of Mrs. Lusk's eldest son who was killed in line of duty during the war. Young Mrs. Lusk has a charming home at Laguna Beach, Calif., with flowering gardens at the front and the blue Pacific ocean at the back.

Representative Helen Gahagan Douglas has a family waiting for her in Los Angeles and she's getting there as soon as Congress adjourns. Melvyn Douglas, her husband, and her children, Gregory, Peter and Mary, all have been writing letters urging her to come home.

It will be work as usual for Representive Edith Nourse Rogers,

George West, Miss Rosicki To Be Married

Underwood & Underwood

MISS PATRICIA ROSICKI
. . . She's engaged

Dr. and Mme. Stefan Watta Rosicki announce the engagement of their daughter, Patricia Margaret Watta Rosicki, to George Lybrook West, jr., of San Francisco and Burlingame, Calif.

The bride-elect is a graduate of Mount Vernon Seminary and Holton Arms Junior College. She also attended St. Patrick's School in Miami Beach and studied in Europe. Her father was in the Polish Foreign Service for 20 years during which time he served in European countries and the United States.

Mr. West, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. L. West, is a graduate of the Tamalpais School for Boys of San Rafael, Calif., and of Stanford University. He is an officer in the United States Foreign Service and has served in Canada, Greenland, Finland, Sweden, and at the United Nations Conference in San Francisco in 1945. Since the summer of that year he has been on duty in the State Department where he is in the southern European division.

The wedding will take place in the fall.

Tricks for Teens

By Nancy Pepper

With memories of your final exams growing dimmer and dimmer—and your waistline growing anything but slimmer and slimmer, you're spending every possible sunny moment basking in the sun. If you're lucky, you do your basking on a beach—and here's what you're wearing besides a coat of tan.

GOB JOBS—Favorite beach coat with the girls who knew a sailor (or were related to one) is a huge white sailor middy, worn over a swim suit like an oversize bag, or belted around the middle with a wide leather belt. You can still buy them at Navy supply stores, we hear.

FROM PIGTAILS TO HORSE TAILS—Last year you all wore pigtails on the beach, pinned around your head like Esther Williams. This year, most of you are pulling your hair straight back into a rubber band and letting it hang like a horse tail down your back. Next thing you know the Wolves will be Whinneying, instead of Whistling at you.

SAND SACKS—You're wearing thigh-high versions of your beloved Sack Dresses as Beach Coats made of pastel or white tubular wool jersey and belted. A huge monogram done in sequins is sure to attract attention—and imitators.

CORK TIPPED—Your favorite beach jewelry is made of the little corks that lurk inside of coke bottle tops. You string them on colorful shoe laces for necklaces, anklets and bracelets. Favorite decoration is nail polish initials.

Well, girls who are shipshape may be seaworthy, but girls who are streamlined are SEE-Worthy.

Feature Productions

Whoever thought we'd be discussing Plastic Surgery in this column? Time was when only movie stars had their noses and chins remodeled—and they tried to keep it a deep, dark secret. But, according to one of the leading plastic surgeons in this country, a great many of the plastic surgery cases are now teen-age girls who have just graduated from high school and are about to start college. Most of them want to start their new lives with new noses and a good surgeon can do the trick for them with little pain and less danger. Imagine going into the operating room like Jimmy Durante and coming out like Kathryn Grayson! We talked with one 17-year-older who had just had her nose bobbed and she told us that it not only improved her appearance, but her personality and her disposition.

Good plastic surgery is pretty expensive—so, if you're not entirely pleased with your profile, better start saving your pennies now for a new one! Modern Design Marches On!

I couldn't guess his legs were scrawny;
I thought him muscular—not stout—
A Beach is where THE TRUTH WILL OUT.

Summer Sparklers

Your latest dime store delights are rhinestones—the poor man's diamonds. Those girls in the cold-cream ads who are "lovely" and "engaged" aren't the only ones to sport sparklers. Any teener with some of her allowance left and a dime store around can—and does—have them, too.

THIRD FINGER, LEFT HAND—If you're Going Steady, you wear a fake diamond solitaire on that important finger. And, even if you're an Orphan Annie, you wear one, too—just for the fun and the fad of it. Better coat the setting with nail polish unless green is your favorite color.

JEWELED PIGTAILS—Buy a pair of Dime Store Diamond Rings and wear them on your pigtails. Much prettier than those rubber bands and sure to cause comment at the Local Thirst Emporium, otherwise known as the Corner Casbah.

JILLS IN GEMS—Maybe you'll find an old rhinestone bracelet in mother's odd-and-ends box, or maybe you'll have to buy one at the Dime Store. In any event, you sew it on a black velvet ribbon and tie it around your neck as a choker with your off-shoulder blouses.

Pirate Party

Hay rides, square dances, wienie roasts—everybody's giving them and going to them. We want your party to be the stand-out of the season, and we know you do, too—so let's plan a Pirate Party. From now on, it's "Yo ho ho and a bottle of pop."

BID FROM KIDD—Captain Kidd, we mean. Your invitations must be as piratical as your party—so take your choice of these two ideas. Cut large circles out of black paper and paint on them in red paint (or nail polish)—"You're On the Spot. Calling All Pirates to a party at———" (Tell them where, when, etc.). Or, how about writing your invitations on narrow strips of paper which you roll up and stuff into empty pop bottles, like messages washed up by the sea. Your kid brother will love to deliver them for you—we hope.

DRESS THE PART—Everybody must come dressed as a pirate, of course. It's an easy costume—all you need is a striped T shirt, a pair of jeans, a stocking cap or scarf and big hoop earrings. For an added touch, why not a black patch over one eye? And you might paint pirate phrases over your jeans—like "Ahoy There," "Pieces of Eight," "Land, Ho" and "On the Spot." Anything for a Lift—and a Laugh.

Girl Scouts of Area Leave For Virginia Summer Camp

One hundred and thirty-five Girl Scouts from the District and Montgomery County, Md. left Thursday to attend the second session of Girl Scout Camp May Flather at Solon, Va. When they return an equal number will replace them for the final session, August 7-28.

Both the first and second camp sessions were filled to capacity. Those interested in attending the camp should telephone NA. 0400.

Girls who recently returned report that work has been done on the natural amphitheater which is to be dedicated later in the summer. Rock gardens have been constructed and hemlock trees have been transplanted to form the background for the stage.

For the first time since before the war, a full arts and crafts program has been possible. There is an electric kiln and the girls have been making ceramics. They will be wearing pins and earbobs of their own making to school this winter, and mother will find herself with a new supply of vases, ashtrays and household ornaments.

Leather and metal work is also proving popular. One of the most interesting of the crafts is weaving, which is done on huge floor looms.

Principal thrill of camping came from the outdoor activities. Swimming and bicycle riding have been among the most popular of the sports. A victrola was given the camp this year, so the girls have been getting in some square dancing.

Director of the camp is Miss Lucky Knox. Professional adviser is Miss Lenora Mann, who also has charge of all local camping.

Miss Myers, Mr. Wootton Are Married

Wesley Methodist Church at 12 noon yesterday was the scene of a marriage of Miss Cecil Virginia Myers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles G. Myers of Washington, to William E. Wootton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Wootton of Rockville, Md. The Rev. C. Stanley Lowell officiated.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and attended by Mrs. William N. Seitz. A Dawson Wootton was best man for his brother and ushers were Walter P. Johnson, jr., and John H. Dawson.

Mrs. Wootton is a graduate of Southern Seminary Junior College and University of Maryland. Her husband was graduated from Army Finance School, Duke University.

His Mom's Hats Frightened John Frederics Into Being a Milliner

Looks, Not Style Important, He Insists

By Peggy Preston

NEW YORK, July 19.—What is a fashionable hat?

Why, the newest, the very latest model on the market, of course, or perhaps that devastating number worn by your favorite movie actress in her last film.

Peggy Preston

It's nothing of the kind, according to John Frederics, capricious creator of feminine headgear, the man who drapes the heads of the ultra-fashionable from Hollywood to New York.

"There is no such thing as a fashionable hat," snapped Mr. Frederics during an interview in his slick, modernistic salon on Manhattan's East Side. "A well-dressed woman wears a hat because it becomes her, not because it is the latest decree from the Millinery High Command."

Mr. Frederics was quite positive on the subject. "Why do you use the word 'fashionable'?" he wanted to know. "Why don't you banish it from your vocabulary? It's a foolish word!"

So we started over.

"What, Mr. Frederics, do you consider a good hat?"

"A good hat suits a woman's face and personality, not the current mode," he explained. "I do not mean that she must wear the same type of hat year in and year out. But she should discover a style that becomes her and wear careful variations of that basic design. The Duchess of Windsor, for instance, sticks to her typical halo hat and achieves perfection at all times."

No Cause for Alarm

WHICH brought us to the big question of the day. What about the new, heavy hats which are being featured by most of the topflight designers this year? Radically new and different, how becoming will they be to the average woman? And what can she do about it if they are not?

Mr. Frederics thinks we've been alarming ourselves unnecessarily over the new hats. Granted, there will be more material in them than we have been used to, the good ones still will not be bulky or unbecoming. "If they are, don't buy them," he advises. "Go bareheaded instead."

According to Mr. Frederics, the millinery industry is going through a period of transition and the head silhouette is not clearly defined as yet.

Fashion Turnabout

WE HAVE had six years of clover when dress materials were scarce and women put everything on their heads. Now the situation is just the other way around. Accent is on the figure. Hats are taking a back seat this year. For the time being, the hat is the least important part of the costume."

But the hat is still mighty important to Mr. Frederics, whose thriving millinery business has made him one of the wealthiest men in the industry. He employs more than 200 milliners in his shop here, an additional number in a Hollywood salon. His customers include such well-dressed women as the Duchess of Windsor, Mrs. Gloria Vanderbilt, and screen actresses Rosalind Russell and Joan Fontaine.

Millions of lesser-known women purchase his creations in high-priced stores across the country. It is a source of pride to Mr. Frederics that more of his hats are bought in Dallas than in New York.

Hobby Is Painting

KEEPING the ideas pouring in and the hats pouring out is a time-consuming occupation. From the time he was 16 until a few months ago, John Frederics devoted his entire time to his millinery business. But, like most successful persons, he discovered a hobby—painting.

So engrossed has he become in his new field of expression that he arises each morning at 5 and paints until time to go to the office. His teachers and critics consider his work good enough now to be put on exhibition and are sponsoring a show of his oil paintings in October.

But hats remain the first love of this dapper, dark-browed designer. After all, as he points out, there have been milliners in his family for seven generations. His mother, who is still living, carried on the trade in New York when she arrived here from Europe.

"She was successful and I served a long and rigorous apprenticeship under her," said Mr. Frederics. "But, as I've often told her, if I hadn't hated her hats so much I'd never have started making them myself."

JOHN FREDERICS
. . . Hats for the famous

THE casual hat (circle) becomes elegant in this interpretation by John Frederics. Material is rich, gold beaver shaped into the new, large, creased crown with slightly rippled brim. For a hatband, the designer uses ermine tails. Rounded, wrapped and rapturously warm for fall and winter is the practical town hat, above. Of black felt, its carefully controlled ballooning, which frames the face, is covered with gray jersey. The matching jersey drapery is adjustable

FREDERICS achieves the new, wider look in this big black beret. Crown is large and flat, softly manipulated; the brim is slightly stiffened. Between them, glycerined black ostrich feathers flutter down, fragile and flattering

Captain Dun Is Married

Square, here. A few summer visitors have joined the Robbins family in the village, among them Bishop and Mrs. Dun, who bought the village creamery, which they converted into their home. Summer neighbors include Justice and Mrs. Felix Frankfurter and the Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, Bishop of New York.

Bishop Dun was allowed to marry his son only after conforming to certain regulations of the State of Massachusetts. He had to swear to uphold the Constitution of the United States and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Then he received a commission signed by the Governor of the State.

All the villagers of Heath gave a square dance for the young couple Friday night and attended the wedding yesterday.

The bride spent her early school years in northern Maine with her father and stepmother. Later she studied in Switzerland and at Katharine Gibbs Secretarial School, Boston, and has been working at an Army hospital in San Antonio.

Captain Dun, a graduate of Deerfield Academy and Yale University, took the accelerated course at Harvard Medical School and served a shortened internship at Peter Bent Brigham Hospital in Boston before being assigned to the regular Army Air Forces Hospital at San Antonio, where he and his bride will live until his release from the Army. He plans to settle in Boston and practice surgery.

who rarely takes a holiday from her job, and Representative Katharine St. George, "rookie" Congresswoman from New York, has given no inkling of her plans.

MRS. MARY NORTON, long time a member of Congress from New Jersey, says she's definitely going to take a vacation but where it will be she hasn't yet decided.

A candidate for the Senate in 1948, Representative Margaret Chase Smith has her summer's work cut out for her. She'll stay in Washington for a few days to wind up unfniished business at the end of Congress then open up an office in her home town, Skowhegan, Me. A tour of her seven districts will be followed by visits throughout the State.

Town Talk

Wasp Waist Is Decree From Paris

By Eva Hinton

"A GAL in Paris in a short skirt would feel positively indecent nowadays," reports my style scout from the Rue de la Paix. Paris offers every latitude in feminine dress for the coming season, but there are two absolute laws. Skirts must be long and waists must be small.

To help achieve the latter enviable state there is a miraculous new corset called the "guepiere," from "guepe," meaning wasp. It pulls one in at the waist and (here is the miracle) it doesn't puff the hips out or provide a "rubber tire" above the waist. No one but the designer of the guepiere knows where the displaced fat goes, and she won't tell!

Talored suits are trimmed at the edges with a variety of braid to please all tastes and the French couturieres are imitating American play clothes and sports wear.

HATS are very pretty and not too exaggerated, but they must be worn either "off-the-face," or sitting straight and high on top of the head. No more coy glances from under a brim and no more slap-dash over-one-eye effects.

A hat by Suzy, described by an eye-witness as "exquisite," is made of burnt-sugar straw, has a green velvet border and is furnished, among other things, with red velvet ribbon, a brown carnation made of feathers and a pink silk rose. Yet the whole effect is "extraordinarily subdued and one could wear it with anything."

Gowns in Paris are still terribly expensive and couturiers with established names are trying to make it up to their clientele by going more and more classical in design so that each creation "will be perfectly good for years, my dear!"

BUT NEWCOMERS in the field of whom Jacques Fath and Christian Dior are the most successful, are creating fantasies in frocks.

Christian Dior is a typical businessman but Fath is a young man as unusual as any of his gowns. Last winter he gave a ball with no orchestra, no heat, no food, and NO husbands. But with all the most beautiful and best-dressed women of five continents! It seems that the husbands were invited, but probably being less interested in fashions, preferred the comfort of home.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Against His Better Judgment and His Doctor's Orders, Farmer Works Desperately Hard, While His Wife and Children Pine for Companionship

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: After 15 years' marriage, my farmer husband and I are beginning to feel discontented with our life—and so are our children.

My husband has worked hard all his life and has the idea that "the almighty dollar" is the only thing worth striving for. In spite of his better judgment and his physician's advice, he continues to drive himself as hard as he can go, from force of habit.

In the early years of marriage I had thought we were working together toward the good purpose of building a comfortable home and having some leisure in which to companionably enjoy the fruits of our labor.

Today he still talks of the home we will have some day, and says that eventually he will have more time to give to his family. But as fast as he earns money, he is planning how he'll invest it,—always in a way that will keep him even busier, if possible.

Wife's Worry Bothers Her

MEANWHILE his children are growing up needing him, and seeing him only when he is tired and cross. Occasionally we persuade him to take a few hours off, to go some place or do something recreational; but he feels such a sense of guilt at leaving his work that he can't relax and enjoy himself.

We do greatly need his companionship and would gladly get along on less money to have it. They say you can't teach an old dog new tricks; but can you suggest a way to help us save his health and our happiness as a family? The problem is assuming mountainous proportions in my mind.

In the past we've had our ups and downs, but always solved all other problems together. I have a full life with my duties as wife and mother, and I have adopted several outside interests that are stimulating and worth while,—mainly in the hope of getting my mind off the problem. But running away from it isn't the answer; and we would appreciate your counsel. F. C.

Anxiety Neurosis Is Riding Farmer

DEAR F. C.: "What can't be cured must be endured," and it probably is too late in the day to modify your husband's temperament and high tension performance, especially since he isn't interested in mastering the art of relaxation, within reason.

Basically he is driven by an anxiety neurosis, which accounts for his inability to knock off from work without feeling worried, and also explains his tireless chase of the "almighty dollar," which to him spells security.

The fact that he has worked hard all his life indicates that he got his start in impoverished surroundings where hardship, deprivation and anxiety about the morrow were the order of the day, where his elders were always preoccupied with "the struggle to survive,"—a type of conditioning which inexorably fosters neurotic tension in sensitive conscientious children born of responsibly minded stock.

Moreover, such rearing tends to produce lonely introvert character, inasmuch as the parents give little time or thought to providing their children with fond leisurely warmhearted companionship. Thus the net result is a person who hasn't much inclination in the direction of affectional closeness to other human beings in later life.

Wife's Attitude Excessive, Too

HE MAY form ties, such as marriage, in a groping attempt to relieve his inner loneliness or psychic isolation, but at the same time he will involuntarily throw up artificial barriers against real intimacy of mind or spirit,—by "making" so busy that he has no margin of leisure for such experience. This is true of your husband, I think.

His relentless application to work doubtless refers not only to overweening neurotic fear of impoverished old age; but also to neurotic distrust of his ability to please in close relationship,—which latter fear causes him to avoid testing on that score, insofar as he plausibly can.

Given psychiatric help and the earnest desire to "find" himself, that he might prolong and better enjoy his life, your husband could greatly reduce his tension, I'm sure. However, if he won't, that puts the problem up to you. And the remedy is: Accommodate.

After all, he hasn't changed from the man you married. He's still the same; and that's your fret. Is it logical? Are you passing through the doldrums of middle age at this time? I think it's a mistake to dwell so much on the children's need of his companionship. Why breed discontent in them on this score, when you can compensate adequately, if you will? M. H.

hausted and had to relax a bit. Richard Sanger of the State Department said he knew of only 35 unscheduled minutes on the Prince's heavy party calendar.

At a press conference the Prince held, amber beads and silver cigarette cases were passed out as souvenirs. After a tour of the country, the Prince will go back to the isolated land of tall buildings and ancient tradition, which has captured everyone's imagination.

THE Siamese Ambassador's wife, Princess Wan Waithayakon, will present the Smithsonian Institution with a gold thread coat worn in her country on court occasions. The coat weighs about 20 pounds, and although almost a century old, has never tarnished. It was worn by the Ambassador's father, when he had audiences with the King.

The most entertaining children in Washington are those of the Siamese staff members. They learn to dance before they walk, and sing before they talk. Their mothers massage their flexible little hands from birth, and in no time fingers flutter in expressive gestures. The tonal quality of the language makes the child's speaking voice sound like tinkling music.

The Military Attache of the Siamese Embassy and Mme. Kunjara gave an informal supper party on Thursday evening at their new home in Chevy Chase. Cohosts were the latter's brother-in-law and sister, the Press Attache and Mme. Prabha.

After supper, the three youngest Kunjara children entertained with Siamese songs and dances. Separated from their parents for six years during the war, the children have just arrived from Siam. They speak very little English, while the three oldest children, who happened to be here during the war, speak perfect English and very little Siamese.

A visitor in town is Louis Marks, a big man in the gold mining world of South Africa. He is here to study soil erosion problems of TVA, erosion being one of the big problems of South Africa.

James Thorn, New Zealand High Commissioner to Canada, visited the New Zealand Minister anad Lady Berendsen last week. His daughter, Anne, accompanied him. Sir Carl and Lady Berendsen are now in Flat Rock, N. C., staying with Mrs. Robert E. Lee, III.

The Military Attache of Sweden and Mme. Erickson left Friday for a tour of the country by motor.

Francis Olson Weds Miss Alma Savage

The marriage of Miss Alma Esther Savage, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Savage of Clarks Summit, Pa., to Francis W. Olson, son of Ole C. Olson of Campbell, Miss., took place yesterday afternoon in Trinity Lutheran Church. The Rev. M. M. Hennig officiated.

Given in marriage by Edward Monske, the bride wore a white suit with white accessories and carried an orchid with her prayerbook. Miss Freda Monske was maid of honor and William C. Graham served as best man. A reception followed.

After their wedding trip to New York and Virginia Beach, the newlyweds will reside in Washington. Mr. Olson was graduated from the University of North Dakota.

JANDEL PRESENTS THE NEW FURS at the NEW LOW PRICES

NEVER in our experience as manufacturers and retailers of fine furs, have we seen such amazing innovations in fur styling as in the new collection. Coats are more lavish, sleeves, collars and silhouettes are brilliantly interpreted and most flattering. Quality is the best yet with the return of fine imported furs, unavailable during wartime and in the immediate post war period. And from every indication the current low prices will not be duplicated later in the season. Jandel furs are custom furs. Many are designed by our own stylists and completed in our fur workrooms. Naturally as manufacturers we are in the position to offer you decided price advantages. Whether you select a modestly priced muskrat or the finest Mutation Mink, the Jandel label in your coat is your assurance of supreme quality and the best value.

Indian River Group to Hold Fishing Festival for 2000

By Virginia Cullen

Rehoboth Beach, Del., July 19.—Escorted by United States Coast Guard cruisers, 100 craft of the Indian River Yacht Basin will head out to sea tomorrow with 2000 guests for a free day of fishing.

John Marsh, president of the fishing association at Indian River, says he can take care of from 1500 to 2000 persons and expects every one of the 100 boats to be loaded to the gunwales. First boats will get underway around 8 a. m. The Coast Guard will escort them out of the inlet and then standby until they return. There will be marlin fishing to about 30 miles off the coast and bottom fishing within an 8 to 10 mile limit. Marlins are running just now and there are plenty of bass and porgies and some trout.

The fishing trips will not cost the sportsmen one cent. It's a good will gesture which the boats' captains planned last spring Marsh says. Bait and ice will also be provided and 50 prizes will be awarded for the largest total catches, biggest fish and most unusual fish. The boat captains estimate the day's free fishing trips will cost them around $5000.

Back to her native health around the Delaware Capes, Mrs. George R. Messersmith, wife of the former Ambassador to Argentina, is spending a fortnight at Rehoboth Beach as the guest of her sister, Mrs. Caleb S. Layton of Wilmington, Del., at the Layton cottage overlooking the bird sanctuary of Silver Lake. Mrs. Messersmith arrived last Sunday and her husband also will spend some time here between trips to Washington.

As the former Marian Mustard, Mrs. Messersmith grew up in the nearby town of Lewes, where white man first set foot 316 years ago. Always on her return to the States she finds time to visit briefly the old Mustard property on Second st. where she first met her husband when he was superintendent of the Lewes School. While enjoying a respite from the social duties of a diplomat's wife, some of her girlhood contemporaries are entertaining her informally. Mrs. William P. Orr, jr., gave a buffet supper Thursday at her home on Kings Highway.

In view of the great interest currently manifested in national affairs south of the border and in other foreign countries, the Rehoboth Art League's exhibition of Pan-American arts and crafts is an appropriate addition to the league's summer series of shows. The exhibit remains on view in the studio through July 22 and is open to the public. Authentic native articles from Guatemala, Uruguay, Mexico, Peru, Chile, Colombia, Panama and other countries are contributed by vacationists and residents from prized collections.

Receiving tomorrow afternoon at the Rehoboth Art League's tea in the league studio between 4 and 6 o'clock will be Miss Irene D. Rickards. Guests of honor will be the entire cast of the Del-York Players, currently presenting a series of summer shows in the Rehoboth school auditorium. The group of thespians has been taken into the social life of the summer colony, and cottage owners and permanent residents have been responding generously to their requirements for stage properties by ransacking attics and even living rooms for whatever furnishings are necessary to each week's production.

Luncheon at Club

The Rehoboth Beach Country Club was the setting of a luncheon and shower Friday, when bride-elect Barbara Teal was honored by her aunt, Mrs. Mitchell Miller of Philadelphia. Miss Teal's engagement to Mr. Kenneth Ellis of Ocean View, Del., was announced recently. The wedding is expected to take place in the early autumn. Miss Teal is the daughter of one of Lewes' Delaware River pilots, Captain William Teal, jr.

Mrs. J. Thomas Robinson, Georgetown, Del., and Rehoboth Beach, contributed to the success of the summer bridge party Thursday afternoon in the Episcopal Parish House by donating the entire batch of tickets for the annual benefit of the Women's Auxiliary of the resort church. Mrs. Robinson is the daughter of the late Robert G. Houston, former Representative from Delaware.

Mark Bastille Day

Rehoboth enjoyed a three-day visit this week from several French citizens who came over from Washington to observe Bastille Day. The visitors are in this country in the interest of the International Emergency Food Commission. In the party were Mr. and Mrs. Elie Requier, Raymond Etchats, Mlle. Blanche Founeau and Mme. Eugene Demont.

Mrs. John Stuart Gayle of Washington, wife of Lieutenant Gayle, USA, now in Korea, and her mother, Mrs. J. Lockwood Pratt, wife of Captain Pratt, USN, are spending the remainder of the summer at Rehoboth Beach with Mrs. Pratt's mother, Mrs. Frank L. Grier, at her resort home on the ocean front. Mrs. Gayle, a student of the Rehoboth Art League before her marriage, is now assisting in teaching the junior class.

Washington visitors this week at The Star-of-the-Sea Hotel on the boardwalk were A. A. Hoehling, Dr. and Mrs. George R. Farrell, Miss Mary Hayes, and Mr. and Mrs. John Sonnett, parents of the Assistant Attorney General, George F. Sonnett.

Misses Nancy and Mildred Hoffman are spending the summer with their maternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Anderson, on Henlopen ave. Their parents, Captain Harry D. Hoffman, USN, and Mrs. Hoffman, were here over the weekend. Captain Hoffman, who has been stationed in Chicago, is now on duty in Washington. They expect to spend August at this resort.

Another important social event of the summer season, the annual Lifeguards' Ball, slated for the

Down Virginia Way

By Nina Carter Tabb

MR. AND MRS. JOHN W. BAILEY, JR., and their two children, Joc and Margaret, of Washington, who have been living at Santiago, Chile, for three and a half years, where he has been with the Foreign Service, sailed July 5, and will arrive in New York July 21. They will come directly to Washington and will stay with their brother-in-law and sister, Dr. and Mrs. Charles P. Howze until they open their own home in Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Bailey have taken a cottage at Virginia Beach for the month of August and will have as a guest her mother, Mrs. Thomas Randolph Keith of Washington, formerly of Fairfax Court House. Mrs. Bailey was formerly Miss Margaret Randolph Keith of Fairfax. The Baileys' many friends in Washington and Virginia are planning a warm welcome for them.

Wedding Holds Interest

OF GREAT interest to Virginians and Washingtonians is the announcement by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ardenes Norman of Richmond of the engagement of their daughter, Ann Nalle Norman, to Mr. William Powell Blair of Richmond and Washington, son of Mr. and Mrs. Smith Blair of Washington. Miss Norman is the granddaughter of Mrs. Charles Thomas Norman and the late Mr. Norman of Richmond. She attended the Richmond division of the College of William and Mary. Mr. Blair attended George Washington University and during the last war served as captain with the Army Air Forces in the Pacific theater. He is now with the Veterans Administration in Richmond.

Mr. Blair's ancestors came from Loudoun and Fauquier counties. His maternal grandparents were the late Mr. and Mrs. William Leven Powell. His paternal grandfather, Capt. S. M. F. Smith, was born and lived at Mount Eccentric, near the Plains, Fauquier County. The wedding will take place in December.

Mrs. Gibson Frasier of Upperville, Va., announces the engagement of her daughter, Miss Emily Darst Frasier, to Mr. George Gordon Mackay, son of Mrs. Jessie Logan Mackay of Addison, N. Y., and the late Rev. Daniel Mackay. Miss Frasier, the daughter of the late Gibson Frasier of Upperville, is a graduate of Garfield Memorial Hospital Training School for Nurses. She is a lieutenant commander in the Nurses' Corps, U. S. Navy, and is stationed at the U. S. Naval Hospital, Portsmouth, Va. She served in both the Atlantic and Pacific theaters during World War II. Mr. Mackay is a graduate of the University of Illinois. He served as lieutenant commander in the Navy, and as an air combat intelligence officer aboard aircraft carriers in both the Atlantic and Pacific. He is now associated with Laidlaw Brothers, educational publishers, in Illinois. Miss Frasier is a sister of Mrs. Thomas Cochran, the Plains. No date has been set for the wedding.

Wertenbakers With Parents

Col. and Mrs. George Wertenbaker of Washington spent the past weekend with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Moncure Nelson Lyon at their home, Black Oak Ridge, near Purcellville. They attended a dinner party given by Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Turner while here. Mrs. Mary Cary Walker and her son, Tim Dudley, have returned to their home in Richmond from a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Robert F. Turner at their home near Middleburg.

Frank E. Warner Weds Miss McBride

Miss Maureen Maris McBride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David C. Jordan of Brentwood, Md., was married to Frank E. Warner, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Warner of Washington yesterday morning in Christ Church, the Rev. Carter S. Gillis officiating.

Given in marriage by her stepfather, the bride wore an afternoon dress of ecru silk and lace with brown accessories and carried tiger orchids on her prayerbook. Mrs. Francis F. Riddle was her sister's matron of honor. Best man was Henry W. Slice. A small reception followed at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. Warner is a veteran of four years' service with the Navy Air Corps.

Guests at Buckingham Palace

Midshipmen Given Royal Welcome

Annapolis, Md., July 19.—Annapolis midshipmen visiting London on their summer training cruise are enjoying numerous entertainments and parties planned for them during their stay there. 20 midshipmen were guests at the garden party held July 10 at Buckingham Palace. They were introduced to Princess Elizabeth and her fiance, Lieut. Philip Mountbatten.

More than 150 sailing craft, from moth boats to big class A yachts, competed in the annual regatta of the Annapolis Yacht Club held here last weekend. The annual rendezvous of the Chesapeake Yacht Racing Association was held at the club on Saturday, with a cocktail party and buffet supper as outstanding features of entertainment.

Miss Evans Is Married

In a charming garden ceremony, Miss Lucia Bernardine Evans and Archibald Coleman Rogers were married at 5 p. m. Saturday, July 12, in Norman, Ill. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. E. Evans, at whose home the wedding took place, and the late Mr. Evans. Mr. Rogers is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Coleman Rogers of Belvoir, near Annapolis.

Miss Helen Adeline Milligan and Ensign David Trent Leighton, USN, the son of Mrs. Frank T. Leighton and the late Rear Admiral Leighton, were recently wed at the summer home of the Leightons in Jamestown, R. I. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Harry A. Milligan of San Diego, Calif., and the late Mr. Milligan. Rear Admiral Leighton served several tours of duty at the Naval Academy and the family has many friends in Annapolis.

Mrs. Nicholas H. Green of Charles st., and her daughter, Mrs. Oden Bowie Duckett, jr., were hostesses Wednesday evening at a buffet supper and shower in honor of Miss Margaret Hall Munroe, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Frank A. Munroe, jr. of Franklin st., whose marriage to Lieut. Edson L. Garrabrants, USA, took place today in St. Anne's Episcopal Church here.

On Saturday evening, July 12, Miss Barbara Jean Moore, one of Miss Munroe's bridesmaids, entertained at a bridge party at her home on King George st. for Miss Munroe. Another party for her was given recently by Miss Mary Elizabeth Kitchin, who will also be a bridesmaid.

Miss Erickson Engaged

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Erickson of Bay Ridge ave., Eastport, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Mary Beverly, to Ben L. Hopping, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin L. Hopping of West st., Annapolis. The wedding is planned for the near future.

Mr. and Mrs. William S. Kirby of Arnold have announced the recent marriage of their daughter, Emma Mae, to Charles Joseph DiFazio, a member of the faculty of the Annapolis High School. The ceremony was performed at Our Lady of Lourdes Church in Arlington, Va.

David S. Jenkins, superintendent of schools of Anne Arundel County, and Mrs. Jenkins have returned from a visit to Boston, where they were guests of their son-in-law and daughter, Lieut. and Mrs. Walter R. Gerich. Lieutenant Gerich is attending Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Capt. and Mrs. Wells Field and their daughter, Miss Tabitha Field, have returned from a trip to Pelham Manor, N. Y., as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. William Gillett. While there, they attended the wedding of Mrs. Field's niece, Miss Mary Duncan Gillett, and William Rockefeller, jr. Miss Field served as maid of honor for her cousin.

Return From Germany

Maj. Robert C. Bean, USA, Mrs. Bean and her children, Dana Lee and Anne Kohler, have returned from Germany and are the guests of Major Bean's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Bean of Thompson st., and Mrs. Bean's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James J. Stehle of Academy st.

Major Bean, who is currently on leave awaiting further orders, was with the G4 Section headquarters of the U. S. Constabulary in Heidelberg.

John F. Kelley, jr., has arrived here to assume his new duties as an instructor in chemistry in the Department of Electrical Engineering at the Naval Academy. Mr. Kelley, a native of Boston, served as a lieutenant-commander in the Naval Reserve during the war.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Labrot and Miss Leonie Labrot were hosts on Tuesday evening at a crab feast given for the local members of RONS and their wives. Many of those present enjoyed swimming and boating before the supper, which was served on the lawn of Holly Beach Farm, the Labrot estate near St. Margaret's.

Lieut.-Comdr. and Mrs. L. St. Clair Swepston have announced the recent birth of a son, Lee St. Clair Swepston, jr., at the Naval Hospital here.

Mrs. Morgan H. Baldwin was the hostess Monday afternoon at a tea in honor of her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Morgan H. Baldwin, jr., who have just returned from a wedding trip to Bermuda. They were married on June 27 at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Baltimore. The bride is the former Miss Nancy Stewart Darrell, daughter of Mrs. Harvey Cavendish of Ruxton.

Aubrey B. Beall of Washington is visiting his brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. John M. C. Beall, at Two Sisters' Farm, near Davidsonville.

Chileans to Dance At Club Tonight

The dinner and dance at the United Nations Club this evening will be held under the auspices of the Chilean Embassy. Among those who will attend besides the members of the embassy will be Mrs. Randolph Huntington Miner, Mrs. Harold Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burke, Miss Patricia Morgan, Mrs. Edward R. Finkenstaedt, Senator Burton K. Wheeler, Cecil Lyon, Ralph McBane, Mrs. English Gordon and Fred Roy.

It is expected that members of the visiting British bomber squadron will attend. The club has extended them a cordial invitation to all of its activities for the duration of their visit.

Maryland U. Unit Wins 'Efficiency' Tray

The University of Maryland chapter of Alpha Xi Delta, national women's fraternity, recently was given the achievement tray, awarded each year to the chapter displaying the most efficiency during the preceding year. Announcement of the award was made at the fraternity's national conclave held in Manor Richelieu, Murray Bay, Quebec, Canada.

Sixteen members of the Washington alumnae and University of Maryland attended the convention. Mrs. Beverly Robinson, retiring national president of the organization, headed the local delegation which included Miss Lois Martin, Miss Carolyn Allender, Miss Betsey Lipp, Miss June Rightor, Miss Shirley Wilson, Miss Mary Lee Kamp, Mrs. William M. Smedley, Mrs. L. W. Murray, Miss Margaret Kauffman, Mrs. Blaine F. Moore, Mrs. Herbert L. Hughes, Mrs. George E. Waesche, Mrs. G. E. Stephenson, Mrs. Arthur L. Pease and Mrs. E. Orville Emery.

Mrs. Garfield Visiting

Mrs. Louis Garfield of Columbus, Ohio, is here for a visit of several weeks with her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Grosner, at the Shoreham. Mr. Grosner recently returned from a fishing trip at Lake of the Woods, Canada.

Senator Cain's Family in Tacoma

Mrs. Harry P. Cain, wife of the Senator from Washington, and their two children, Buzzie and Candy, age 9 and 4, have arrived in Tacoma, Wash., to spend the summer at their home on American Lake.

Mrs. Cain and their children visited in Nashville, Tenn., where the Senator was born, before the trip to the West Coast and were present when the Senator recently was awarded a doctor of civil laws honorary degree at the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn.

Mrs. Dickenson Is Guest at Tea

Leesburg, Va., July 19.—Mrs. J. Shenton Lodge entertained at tea last Saturday afternoon in honor of Mrs. Frank Dickenson, formerly of Nova Scotia, who has recently returned to America after spending 30 years in China. Mrs. Dickenson is now living at Belvoir Plantations, the Plains, Va. Eighty guests were present for the occasion.

Summer flowers, arranged in vases, decorated the living room where the guests were received. Refreshments were served in the dining room. Miss Nancy Bradfield presided at the punch bowl.

Numerous entertainments have been given for Miss Margaret Rogers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Van Velsor Rogers of Paeonian Springs, Va., whose marriage to Charles Neale Hergenrather of Towson, Md., will take place in St. James Episcopal Church, Leesburg, Saturday evening, July 26.

Mrs. Arthur Godfrey entertained at a shower at her home near Leesburg on Wednesday evening for the prospective bride. On Saturday afternoon, Mrs. Robert Donaldson entertained at a miscellaneous shower at her home in Waterford. A luncheon was given in Washington on Wednesday for Miss Rogers by Mrs. Stewart McDonald. Miss Lowell Anne McPhee, maid of honor, has arrived from Princeton, N. J., to be with the Rogers until after the wedding.

Miss Vivianne Hooppaw was hostess to a number of friends at a buffet supper at her home in Leesburg Wednesday evening. Mrs. Michael Grenata entertained the "Hot Sketches" Club Tuesday.

Mrs. J. Armistead Welbourn left Monday for Shrine Mont, Orkney Springs, Va., to spend several weeks. The Welbourns have recently had as their guests the Rev. and Mrs. B. F. Shively, formerly of Kyoto, Japan.

Miss di Zerega on Visit

Miss Lucy di Zerega of the Graduate Hospital, Philadelphia, is spending two weeks at her home in Leesburg. She was accompanied by her roommate, Miss Sue Richmand, who will be in the di Zerega home for a week. Miss Clarence Snowden of Alexandria is the guest of her brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. David N. Rust, jr. Mr. and Mrs. Mark White have as their guests Mr. White's sister, Mrs. Mary Lampe and her son, David Lampe of Baltimore. Mrs. Mary Gray Lewis and Thomas Clagett Lewis of Torresdale, Pa. have been the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Murray Dyer and Miss Christine Wildman. Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Eastburn and two sons, Eddie and George of Indian Head, Md. were Sunday guests of Mrs. Eastburn's aunt, Mrs. Bernard Minor on South King street. Miss Anne Smoot of Washington spent the weekend with her parents, Dr. and Mrs. F. P. Smoot. She was accompanied by Robert Reardon of Washington who also was a weekend guest in the Smoot home.

Miss Sara Harrison of Washington is the guest of her parents, Commonwealth's Attorney and Mrs. Charles F. Harrison. Miss Nancy Burdick, Washington debutante, was a recent guest in the home of Dr. and Mrs. W. Otis Bailey. Miss Nancy Musgrave returned Saturday from Huntington, W. Va., where she has been the guest for three weeks of her aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Elliott Vawter.

William Lodge, son of the Rev. and Mrs. J. Shenton Lodge, is spending a vacation on the Eastern Shore of Virginia with his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. William T. James. Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Richard are visiting relatives in Dayton, Ohio.

Miss Kitty Clemens returned Saturday from a four weeks' visit with Miss Carol Wood, who lives near Philadelphia.

Elder and Mrs. H. H. Lefferts, their grandson, Leedom Lefferts, their house guest, Mrs. Helen McCormick of Washington and Mrs. David Farnie of Leesburg, were weekend guests of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Craig in Arlington, and on Sunday were dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Norman in Herndon.

Mrs. VanMetre Visiting Here

Mrs. S. Norman VanMetre has come from New York to join Colonel VanMetre for the weekend. Colonel VanMetre is stationed at the Pentagon and Mrs. VanMetre maintains their home in New York.

Ask Anne — Your Questions on Homemaking

While refilling my cigarette lighter, the fluid spilled on a plastic table cover and caught fire. The plastic melted and is now like hardened glue or chewing gum over a large area of the flowered cotton tablecloth that was under the plastic one. I sent the cotton cloth to the laundry but the hardened crust didn't come off. Can you suggest some means of softening and removing this crusty mass? R. H. S.

There are so many different formulas for plastics that it's hard to say what solvent would be best in this case. Acetone, which is obtainable at drug stores, might dissolve the crust. Since it bleaches out certain colors, however, try it first on an inconspicuous place on the cloth. Other solvents that might be effective are benzine, alcohol and ether. All three are inflammable, so use them outdoors or near an open window.

Can you tell me how to lime oak? We are having a bookcase made and want to give it a limed oak finish to match the rest of our furniture. W. G.

Your new oak bookcase can be limed in the following manner: First apply a coat of white lead paint which has been thinned down with turpentine. Wipe the paint off with a cloth almost at once, wiping against the grain of the wood. After a day or so, apply a thin coat of shellac. Let it dry thoroughly, then sandpaper the surface lightly with fine-grained paper. Finally, apply several coats of liquid wax. From three to ten coats can be put on, according to your patience.

My grandmother used to make wonderful chess pies when I was a child, but I have no recipe for them. Do you know how they are made? C. J. N.

Chess pie is an old-fashioned dish which is made in several ways. A recipe for one type follows:

Beat ½ cup butter until soft. Add gradually one cup sugar. Blend until creamy. Beat in two or three eggs, one at a time. Add one teaspoon of vanilla or two tablespoons of lemon juice and ¼ cup thick cream. Pour this mixture into a 9-inch pie shell that has been baked about 10 minutes. Return it to the oven and bake slowly (at about 325 degrees F.) until the filling is firm. Let pie cool in the pan.

A fancier edition of chess pie has 1 cup of chopped walnut meats and 1¼ cups of raisins added to the filling before baking. (If you use nuts and raisins, you'll need two pie shells to hold the mixture.) Top with whipped cream.

I preshrunk some rayon butcher linen and hung the material, folded lengthwise, over a shower curtain to dry. After making a dress with this goods, I took it to a cleaner and had it steamed. The crease where the material was folded still shows, however. It's a little darker than the rest of the dress and, unfortunately, is in the center of the front and back. Is there any way I can get rid of these dark creases? E. H. F.

Any attempt to bleach out this line would be ill-advised. However, it may disappear with repeated cleanings (or launderings if the dress is washable) and steamings.

Some time ago, I saw a homemade bamboo screen which was very attractive. Could you tell me if bamboo is again available and where it may be obtained. B. B.

Apparently none of the lumber companies, hobby or craft shops in Washington carries bamboo. Perhaps some reader knows where it can be obtained and will supply this information.

Before shipping our walnut and mahogany furniture to be stored, we wrapped it in heavy brown paper, sealed it with tape, and crated it. It has now been stored much longer than we expected, and it appears we will have to store it indefinitely. Are there any precautions we should take to preserve it during this long storage period? It is still crated and is in a well-ventilated private home. G. P. R.

Since your furniture is in a well-ventilated place—which, it is hoped, is neither too damp nor too dry—your principal problem is protecting it from dust. This is usually done in two ways. Furniture is given a protective coating of wax or polish, then covered well with paper or sheets.

If you polished the furniture before shipping and feel that it is well protected by the paper, it probably will be all right. However, it might be a good idea to check on a few pieces to be sure dust hasn't sifted through the wrappings, and to see whether the wood needs a fresh coat of polish or wax. If there is fabric upholstery, it should be sprayed every few months with a liquid insecticide, preferably one containing DDT. And if you have a piano, be sure it isn't parked against an outside wall.

Meat Costly? Try Hawaiian Casserole

WITH meat in the same class as orchids on your budget, this tempting Hawaiian Casserole comes as good news. It makes the most of a little fish and bacon, but rates as delectable party fare. Here's the way to make enough to serve six persons:

Brown three slices of bacon in a large frying pan. Drain the bacon on paper and reserve to put on top of the casserole. Cut eight green onions into pieces ½ inch long and brown slightly in the bacon fat. Add one cup of cooked mushrooms, one teaspoon Worcestershire sauce and one teaspoon salt. Cook together for about 3 minutes.

Arrange in alternating layers in a casserole one cup of canned tuna or salmon, four cups of cooked macaroni, and the mushroom mixture. Pour over it one can of mushroom soup. Cover and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for about 30 minutes. Arrange the three crisp bacon slices on top a few minutes before removing dish from the oven.

Housewife, Spare That Sofa; Make Your Own Slip Covers

What to do with chairs that are too shabby to keep on using, too good to discard? Give them a new lease on life with stunning slip covers. It's simple—and inexpensive to make your own!

No pattern or special equipment is necessary. All you need are scissors, needle,, thread, lots of pins—and the fabric, of course.

Begin by smoothing the fabric, wrong side out over the inside back and seat of your chair. Allow a 4-inch tuck-in between back and seat to relieve strain.

Now anchor the fabric to the chair by pinning every 2 inches where seams will be. Cut, leaving a 1½-inch seam allowance.

Similarly, you pin and cut the front (or "apron"), arms, sides and back. Baste the pieces together; put them back on chair for final fitting; stitch.

If you can read, you can make trim slip covers by following the directions in our Reader Service booklet No. 35. Step-by-step illustrated instructions for making many types of covers.

Send 25c (coin) for "Making Slip Covers Successfully" to Washington Post, Reader Service, 243 West 17th St., New York 11, N. Y. Print name, address with zone, booklet title and No. 35.

Capitalites Vacationing on Delaware Coast

evening of Aug. 12, is already holding the attention of the resort colony, when several hundred summer visitors, as well as residents of the vicinity, will serve as patrons. Climaxing the social calendar toward the end of the season, the ball is given in honor of members of the beach patrol as an expression of appreciation of their services. It will be held in the Surf Club of the Hotel Henlopen. Dr. Paul S. Burnham, captain of the patrol, is general chairman. James Dillon of Wilmington is ticket chairman, John Bockius is in charge of programs and Miss Ann Kane serves as treasurer.

Mrs. G. M. Eaton of Winnipeg, Canada, has arrived for the season with her two children and is occupying a cottage on Henlopen ave. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Matson, will join her shortly.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Stoessel, jr. (she is the former Mary Ann Farrandou of Washington) have taken a small apartment here. Mr. Stoessel will leave on July 28 for Russia to take up his duties as Second Secretary to the Russian Ambassador.

Mrs. Chiswell on List

Mrs. W. Wallace Chiswell of Washington was at her summer home, Hemlock Hedge, last weekend, when her house guest was Mrs. William Neumyer. Mrs. Chiswell expects to return later this month for the remainder of the season, bringing with her Mr. Chiswell, who was injured in a fall several weeks ago at his home in Washington.

Mrs. David C. Aspril of Wilmington, wife of a Rehoboth Beach commissioner, is entertaining Mrs. Helen Cramer of Wilmington.

Mrs. Morris Whiteside of Wilmington was at the resort Monday, when she made arrangements for leasing a cottage for the rest of the summer.

Judge Richard Seymour Rodney of the United States District Court and Mrs. Rodney, have closed temporarily their home in New Castle, Del., and are now enjoying a vacation at their summer place on St. Lawrence st. With them are their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Wolcott, and their two small children, Lisa and Daniel, jr.

News has been received here of the recent marriage of Miss Corinne Watson Riley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Carson Riley of Easton, Md., to Hubert Hudson Busbee, jr. The ceremony took place in the Protestant Church at Dakar, French West Africa. The bride's mother is a member of the river pilot family of Marshalls of Lewes. During the war Miss Riley did personnel work for the American Red Cross in the Pacific area and later entered the foreign service of the State Department. Mr. Busbee is Vice Consul at Dakar and a graduate of the University of Alabama.

Coin, Customers Flocking to Shopping Centers

Alexandria, Nearby Md. Units Set

(See picture on page 3 for more information on shopping centers.)

By Conrad P. Harness

A SURVEY of projects coming off the drafting boards in local architectural offices reveals that shopping centers, like death and taxes, are firmly established factors in American living.

The independent grocer, druggist or dry cleaner, with his solitary shop on the corner, is rapidly passing from the American scene, especially in the urban areas.

The vast trade center with 10 or more stores, with limestone fronts, gleaming expanses of fluorescent light, featuring open front shops of glass and aluminum are the newcomers, and welcome ones in nearly all cases.

Typical of the new sales emporiums lavishly constructed to make it easy for the family to spend its weekly expense money in "Arlandria," new 12-store shopping center on Mount Vernon blvd., in Alexandria's northern tip.

Serves Large Area

THE developers, Godden & Small, estimate the center will serve a population of over 100,000. Six important bus lines intersect or pass in front of the property.

The center is 85 per cent completed. The first store is expected to open by August 1, with others opening as they are completed. A gala celebration to publicize completion of the entire project will occur around September 1, the developers stated.

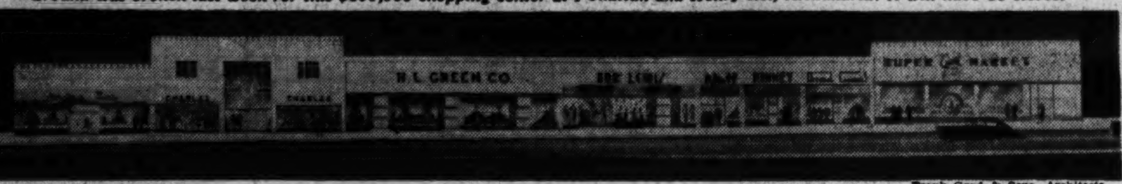
Long-term leases have been signed by the following concerns: Whelan Drugs, 50-foot frontage; Charles Department Stores, 70-foot frontage with three selling floors; H. L. Green Co., 80 feet wide, variety store; Ann Lewis Dress Shop, 50 feet wide; Klaff Gift Shop, 16 feet wide; G. R. Kinney Shoes, 22 feet wide; Official Cleaners, 25 feet wide, and Giant Food Stores, 75 feet wide. All stores have a 125-foot depth, except Giant Food Store, with 150.

The entire development is of reinforced concrete. Indiana limestone was used in the exterior fronts. Buildings are set back from the street to allow parking in the front. A paved concrete lot in the rear allows space for 400 more autos.

The architect was Frank Grad & Sons of Newark and Washington. Cramer-Vollmerhausen was the building firm.

M. Mesrobian, Architect

Ground was broken last week for this $600,000 shopping center at Pohattan and Henry sts., Alexandria: It will have 16 stores.



Frank Grad & Sons, Architects

Godden and Small, developers, named their 12-store shopping center "Arlandria," which even a six-year-old would know is a coined word combining "Arlington" and "Alexandria." The project is located on Mount Vernon blvd., Alexandria, across from Presidential Gardens Apartments

Near Maryland University

ON THE other side of the greater Washington area, in College Park, Md., ground is expected to be broken next week on the one-million-dollar "College Park Shopping Center," covering 4 acres on the Washington-Baltimore hwy. near the University of Maryland.

The project had been stymied for many months by the now defunct priority system installed by Wilson Wyatt when he headed the National Housing Agency as Housing Expediter.

A survey of the site plan, by the architectural firm of Berla & Abel, shows 17 stores and a drive-in Hot Shoppe restaurant, plus a theater and two-story office building. Large parking facilities will be available in the front and additional parking space on the roof of the shopping center.

The terrain has been utilized to provide easy access to roof parking and to minimize excavation for the theater. John and Drew Eberson were architects for the theater.

Harry A. Rosenfeld is agent for the owner, College Park Shopping Center, Inc.

Another for Alexandria

ALEXANDRIA, site of the aforementioned "Arlandria," is also the location of a $600,000, 16-store trade center for which ground was broken last week. It is located on two acres at Pohattan and Henry sts., on U. S. Highway 1, near the Potomac Yards overpass.

Tyler & Rutherford, realty firm which is arranging leases, stated that definite commitments have been received from Peoples Drug and Acme Food Markets. Other stores will include a hardware store, bakery, barber shop, washer service, delicatessen, toggery and radio shop.

Construction is of brick and cast limestone. The structure will be of colonial design. The builder is Walter Von Herbulis, of Arlington. M. Mesrobian, 6810 Connecticut ave., Chevy Chase, Md., is architect.

A spokesman for Tyler & Rutherford said the project was expected to be completed in six months.

Experts Go Far Afield

LOCAL "know how" in shopping center planning and construction will be used in the erection of a million dollar center at Lexington Park, St. Marys County, Md., which will serve the rapidly expanding community which adjoins the Naval Air Station and Test Center, Patuxent River, Md.

The developers claim the development will serve the sixth largest population center in Maryland.

Owner of the project is Lexington Park Shopping Center, Inc. Leases are being assembled by Sherman Hollingsworth, Hyattsville, Architect is Wm. H. van Benschoten, 1122 19th st. nw. Structural engineer is John G. Loehler, and the mechanical engineer is Urdahl & Everetts, both of Washington.

The center will be broken down into three separate buildings, all facing the interior of an eight-acre plot near the intersection of Great Mills and Three-Notched Roads.

The shop fronts will be of the open front type with large areas of glass, shielded from sun and rain by continuous canopies, taking the place of awnings.

Shade trees will grace the interior court and parking areas. The service entrances of shops, which generally face the streets bounding the eight-acre plot, will be screened by masonry walls or split sapling fences.

The center will include a super market, a Butler Brothers variety store, Walgreen drug store, bus terminal, bank, postoffice and 17 other stores plus a 1000-seat theater.

Construction is expected to begin around Aug 15 on the first two groups of buildings which have been approved by the Office of the Housing Expediter. The structures are expected to be completed by February, 1948.

Housing Project Here Shows Age After Five Years

One of the city's hastily built war-housing projects is rapidly deteriorating, the National Capital Housing Authority revealed yesterday.

The project is the 144-unit Stoddert Dwellings, 37th st. and Ridge Road in Anacostia, se. The temporary housing was erected in 1942 to house war workers.

Work will begin July 17 on the "rehabilitation" of eight of the dwellings in an effort to determine the cost of correcting construction deficiencies in the other 136 dwellings, an NHCA spokesman said.

Among the items to be corrected or replaced are rotten joists, grading and drainage.

All Building Records Fall In Arlington

The building boom may be over in other parts of the county, but Arlington County is pointing with pride to its building record.

During the last 12 month the county has broken all previous records for construction, topping the previous high mark in 1942 by $535,144 to amass a grand total of $17,277,931 from July, 1946 through June, 1947.

During the 12-month period the following proposed construction was approved by the Arlington County Building Inspector's office:

900	Detached dwellings	$8,779,624
23	Semidetached homes	332,000
3	Duplex dwellings	44,000
2	Schools	220,543
38	Apartments, 938 units	5,047,000
4	Churches	242,000
877	Alterations, repairs	1,033,858
129	Garages	102,559
54	Business structures	1,476,347
2030		$17,277,931

Arlington builders point out that although the last fiscal year was the highest in the county's history concerning construction, that the figures are somewhat "false" because of the inflated prices paid for construction.

The $5,047,000 figure of proposed apartment units is a weak sister compared to the 1942 total of $12,378,900, resulting from the many vast apartment developments built in that year to house war workers residing in Arlington and working in the District.

D.C. Ranks 7th In New Home Construction

The Greater Washington area is among the top 10 cities in the United States in the current hectic building parade, a Government report revealed yesterday. The Nation's Capital placed seventh in the home building contest and ninth in all types of urban construction. Los Angeles was the winner by a wide margin in both divisions. During April the West Coast city issued permits for new residential construction totalling $37,229,000. Washington had $7,525,000 for the same period.

Los Angeles issued permits totalling $17,584,045 for all types of urban building during April, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, while Washington okayed $3,934,365 in proposed construction.

Baltimore issued permits worth $4,803,000 during the same period. Richmond wrote $2,146,000 in permit valuations.

Following is the list of 10 top centers of building construction as determined by building reports:

LOCATION	PERMIT VALUATION
Los Angeles, Calif.	$17,584,045
Detroit, Mich.	13,393,789
New York, N. Y.	9,658,627
Chicago, Ill.	8,988,549
Oswego, N. Y.	7,092,870
Philadelphia, Pa.	5,499,726
Dallas, Tex.	4,899,051
Houston, Tex.	4,459,386
WASHINGTON, D. C.	3,934,365
Cleveland, Ohio	3,895,600

The following list of cities shows the total of permits issued for new housing units during the first four months of 1947 as contrasted with the same period last year. Many cities had less construction this year than last, while Washington gained over $1,500,000.

CITY	VALUATION IN THOUSANDS New Residential Building First Four Months of 1947	1946
Baltimore	$4,803	$8,902

New Kitchen Cabinet Has All-Purpose Desk

One feature of a new line of all-metal kitchen cabinets is a desk for the kitchen, which pulls out like a drawer and has folding drop-legs that hold it rigidly upright.

Convenient for the housewife's kitchen writing, the desk can also serve as an auxiliary working surface when the kitchen is crowded, or act as a snack table for the busy cook.

Realty Round-Up

THE REALTY boom is over in some cities, zooming in others. The overall picture in the realty business is one of bright prospects. June was a record month for FHA while indications point to much greater activity this fall.

These are a few of the conclusions revealed in the National Association of Real Estate Board's weekly bulletin, "Headlines." Compiled from sources active in the market, the following items of interest were also reported:

NEW HOMES: Moved rapidly in some areas last month under keener competitive conditions. One BOSTON brokerage firm sold 92 houses in 27 hours, while other small new houses waited for Boston buyers. Good demand, along with more critical buyer's attitude, was reported in KANSAS CITY, MO. New houses priced under $10,000 are selling better in PORTLAND, ORE. In CHICAGO residential sales have hit a new high for the year. There is brisk demand in MIAMI for new homes. Levitt & Sons, NEW YORK, have sold all of the 1765 postwar houses built by the firm except two exhibit houses. New house sales are fairly static in INDIANAPOLIS; down a bit in NEW ORLEANS. Inability to make substantial down payments has become more noticeable in ST. PAUL and DENVER.

USED HOUSES: Are selling slower in DENVER'S buyers' market with owners asking high prices, while prices reflect sales resistance in CINCINNATI. Demand is strong for houses not over 10 years old in DETROIT, with prices firm. June activity held steady in ST. LOUIS. Demand is only fair in KANSAS CITY, MO. Sales are on a gradual but solid upswing in CHICAGO. Continued slight downward trend in prices is observed in BOSTON. Slower activity and lower prices, some 20 per cent below peak, are reported in INDIANAPOLIS. There is some seasoned decline in MIAMI, with definite resistence to prices of old houses.

Sales of CHICAGO apartment buildings show an increase over May. A quarter-page ad invites NEW YORKERS to apply for apartments in a building scheduled for September completion. New rent law is expected to stimulate apartment building sales in BIRMINGHAM.

CONSTRUCTION: Is going ahead on a big scale in some areas despite high building costs. A 30-million-dollar-rental development is starting on LONG ISLAND. FHA recently made a record commitment for a 27.5-million-dollar private development near CHICAGO. A 9-million-dollar project is starting in BROOKLYN. A NEW YORK builder is going ahead with 4. 6 million dollars worth of rental housing. Henry Kaiser is financing 10 homes a day in NORTH HOLLYWOOD, CALIF. New home building is about to open in DETROIT, after a long strike. Three complete new towns are planned for the east coast of FLORIDA between MIAMI and PALM BEACH.

MIAMI is heading into a period of high building activity that is expected to increase. Two new office buildings and numerous million dollar projects are starting. MIAMI contractors are preparing to import labor.

In sharp contrast, the Texas Employment Commission finds that high costs already block full building trade employment in the LONE STAR STATE. Costs continue upward in DENVER, but are reported to be down in BOSTON, although not enough to stimulate increased activity. Last week's removal of construction controls is reported to be an encouraging factor. In KANSAS CITY, the present income tax is felt to be a major deterrent to new building by venture capital. Commercial and industrial building is holding well in ST. PAUL.

COMMERCIAL PROPERTY: Is in demand above present supply, in ST. LOUIS and DETROIT. Demand is high, along with prices, in DENVER. There is a stable, steady market in BOSTON. CHICAGO market is slow. Commercial properties are extremely active in CINCINNATI, with many large sales recently announced and others in the making. There is strong demand for good properties in MIAMI. Well leased properties find ready buyers in NEW ORLEANS. A less active industrial property market, with increased management business, is reported in DETROIT.

Built-in Cribs Have Garment Storage Area

A built-in baby crib is doubly useful when high enough so that lower space can be used as storage area for crib linens and baby supplies.

Space can also be used as a miniature closet with swinging brackets on which to hang tiny garments and with drawers for miscellaneous items. When baby outgrows his crib, sleeping area can be easily converted into more storage space by enclosing and adding shelves and doors.

Built-in counter space on each side of the bathroom lavatory, if space permits, is serviceable in many ways. Equipped with a hinged safety rail which drops to form a towel rack when not needed to protect the baby, it forms an ideal place for bathing, dressing the infant.

Removable, plastic-covered easy to clean pads make it a soft spot for baby. Grownups will value the extra space, too, for shaving equipment, cosmetics and handling "bathroom laundry."

Part-Time Real Estate Salesmen Hit

Government employes who build up the family wealth by selling real estate on the side is getting in the hair of nearby Virginia realtors.

If the situation gets any worse, said the Arlington-Alexandria Fairfax Real Estate Board, the group may notify heads of all Government agencies in Washington that many employes on the Federal payroll are engaged in selling real estate.

The board says the practice is contrary to a Federal ruling about after-hours activity of Government employes.

However, a check of regulations showed no existing ruling prohibiting Federal workers from holding jobs on the side, so the realtors' plea may fall on deaf ears.

The part-time property promoters are called "sundowners" by the realtors. Many members of the board feel that realty sales by the alleged "inexperienced" part-timers are creating losses of prestige for the real estate profession.

Besides, the board complains, the competition means lost of income for the established realtor, who must pay overhead costs of rent and personnel, etc.

A board spokesman admitted that the group must hold a house cleaning among its own members, since "a few now employ part-time sales personnel who hold full-time Federal jobs.

The larger Washington Real Estate Board said no such problem is worrying it. The board's code of ethics prohibits members from employing part-time salesmen.

Real Estate Round-Up

VACANT LAND: Enjoys a slight increase in demand in KANSAS CITY. General demand steady in BOSTON, but low priced lots are more active. Uncertain construction costs are slowing down activity in PORTLAND, ORE., and NEW ORLEANS. Small sales increase is apparent in CHICAGO.

FARM PROPERTY: Is reported to be too profitable to sell by the farm loan division of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. Total farm assets are reported to be 20 times as great as total mortgage debt. With sound position and high prices for agriculture, farmers are reluctant, says the firm, to put land on the market. Many sales are of small tracts located near cities and marketed primarily for residential purposes at premium prices.

LATE NEWS: Frank Cortright, spark plug of the National Association of Home Builders, leaves in September for a first-hand look at Europe's chaotic housing conditions. He plans to analyze the European housing situation and plans to study rehabilitation and construction programs under way. His trip will cover England, France, Belgium and possibly the Scandinavian countries, and Portugal . . . A. D. Crumbaugh, realtor, and family have returned from an Atlantic City vacation . . . NAREB has announced its preliminary plans for its fortieth annual convention, set for San Francisco, November 9-14. "Success in Tomorrow's Competition" will be the theme . . . Here's a fine mental morsel to think about: According to informed sources, the number of prefabricated home producers, 289 last year, will be down to around 35 by next spring. Competition has knocked the figure of active producers down to 75. It's a fight for survival from now on.

District Couple To Buy Estate

Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Kilbourne, 2728 36th pl. nw., have signed contracts to purchase a 7½-acre summer estate in Eagles Mere, Pa., according to Previews Inc., marketing agents. R. D. Kehrer of Eagles Mere was the selling broker.

Hot Water Pipes Under Driveway Eliminate Snow

Shoveling snow is no problem to home owners who install hot water pipes under the concrete in sidewalks and driveways. Regular piping laid on a bed of crushed stone is covered by fresh concrete poured around and over the pipes. Experts advise against a bed of cinders, since cinders quickly corrode metal.

A small basement boiler which uses oil as fuel, maintains heat in the pipes and is controlled by an electric switch. Water in pipes is mixed with enough alcohol or anti-freeze to keep it from freezing when heat is not turned on for snow removal.

New Patches Seldom Stick To Cracked, Old Concrete

Cracked and broken cement work around the house becomes a source of annoyance and expense to almost every home owner sooner or later. Although patches can be made, they are seldom satisfactory, are usually unsightly and have no permanence. Particularly is this true of walks and driveways.

The best procedure is to have the entire damaged section of walk or drive removed and replaced with new work. This is because new patches seldom bond properly with old concrete.

Concrete will fail when too much sand is used in proportion to the cement, when it is mixed with impurities, when mixing is not thorough, when the concrete is not kept moist for a proper cure, or when the base is not adequate and settling takes place.

This picture shows only the tenant house and the two chicken houses, not the main residence. This fine poultry farm is located just 12 miles from Winchester, Va., on a main road. There are 120 acres cleared, remaining 90 acres in timber and woodland. The buildings consist of 2 poultry houses, one of 10,000 square feet and one of 2400 square feet. 6-room tenant house and bath. The main house consists of 3 bedrooms and bath, living room 16x54 with lovely fireplace, modern kitchen, screened porch, terrace, and glassed-in porch. All the buildings are constructed of concrete block. Electricity and water supplied from two drilled wells. A manager lives in the tenant house and will remain if desired. This farm is a money maker. This entire property is offered at the ridiculously low price of $24,000.00, which is less than the replacement cost of the buildings and improvements alone. Easy terms.

HOME HINTS

New products on the market include these items:

STEEL AWNINGS with inside fingertip control adjust instantly to give windows cool shade. Built on the principle of venetian blinds, these awnings are installed permanently and will not become drab or corroded by the elements. Rainproof ventilation is a feature of these all-metal awnings, and they are finished in baked-on enamel in a variety of colors.

WEATHER resistant porches lessen repair bills and dangerous collapses due to rotten supports. Use a good wood preservative on all joists and sills. Beveling joists where they contact flooring prevents formation of moisture on large surfaces. Hollow backed flooring coated with white lead, and good outdoor paint on top protect flooring from rapid deterioration.

SALVATION for hard water areas is available in the form of a renewable cartridge type installation which not only softens water but filters it to crystal purity. Contents of the cartridge are synthetic, patterned after nature's own principles. Easy to install on both hot and cold water inlets or on hot water alone, the cartridge costs very little and all servicing necessary is handled by the supplier.

SPACE

Ceramic Tiles Can Give You Inside Garden on Window Sill

THOUGHT you don't have a plot of ground big enough for a summer garden, you can still garden indoors. But if you do have a flourishing outdoor garden, an indoor garden in the living room will give an atmosphere of coolness that will help to soothe heat ravaged nerves.

With the help of ceramic tiles and a little patience, you can have a flourishing garden on the window sill, the fireplace can become a fernery and even the kitchen may have its window sill plot.

The tiles are for two purposes—decoration and work saving. A window sill paved with loose tiles is a natural plant receptacle and water seeping through the pots will not stain the tiles. If you intersperse plain tiles in a bright color with others decorated in designs of flowers, birds and fruits your window sill garden will be twice as charming.

For the fireplace try filling the well with potted plants in graduated sizes. If you cannot achieve enough graduation to fill the well this way place some of your plants on bricks. If you have a very large fireplace, wooden steps such as those used in the kitchen will make a splendid graduating holder.

Try facing the frame of the fireplace with bright colored tiles, or plain ones that you have decorated yourself. A hardy type of tile that takes rough treatment can be placed at the base of the hearth, and you can lay the tiles yourself.

THE FACING of ceramic tiles for this window—plain ones in green and decorated ones in bright flower designs—is attractive. It also protects the sill from seeping water

Put a strip of wood around the outside of the tiles on the hearth so that the edges will not break off if they are stepped upon.

For your kitchen window get some of the brightly decorated tiles with vegetable designs. Both decorated and plain tiles are available at any tile contractors.

Home Buyers Overlook Many Tax Deductions

Next March 15 is relatively a long way off, but the wise home buyer will start now to anticipate the date and keep a record and proof of expenses, losses and other items that can be deducted from income taxes.

Unless such records are noted at the time, the average person has considerable difficulty in recalling and documenting them when tax-paying time comes around, according to accountants who specialize in income tax work.

It is estimated that home buyers are entitled to millions of dollars in deductions which they fail to report. Now, with no immediate reduction in tax rates in sight as a result of the presidential veto of the tax bill, deductible items assume large importance.

Most home buyers who are financing their purchase with a mortgage find they will come out further ahead if they use the long tax form to compute deductions exactly for interest and real estate and other taxes instead of using the short form which makes a flat allowable deduction of 10 per cent if income is less than $5000 or $500 if more than $5000.

Losses caused by fire, storm, explosion, frozen pipes—even drouth and casualty damage to trees—are deductible when not fully compensated by insurance. The deduction is the difference between the amount of insurance received and cost of replacement. This does not apply, however, to termite or erosion damage. The law uses the words, "sudden, unexpected or unusual cause."

Neither can deductions be made for construction costs, expenses in acquiring property such as perfecting title, insurance premiums on the residence, decrease in value, attorney's fees, or local assessments which benefit the property.

On the other hand, the home buyer can get credit for cost of replacing trees and shrubbery, provided damage came unexpectedly by storm, drouth, insects or accident. Proof must be submitted as to loss, such as an estimate by an expert of the property value with and without the shrubbery and trees.

To be truly a home a house must fit the personalities of it's owners. This one quietly informs the casual observer, "My people are secure in their position, conservative in their judgment, dignified in their demeanor, unpretentious in their desires, gracious in their living and content in their family fellowship." It is located only 3 blocks from 16th Street in the Crestwood area. Its white marble fireplace lends beauty and charm to a moderately sized living room from which extends a comfortable den; a restful enclosed side porch is an enjoyable addition to the gracious dining room; a divided stairway, leading from the living room and kitchen, provides easy access to 4 accommodating 2nd floor bedrooms and 2 baths. There are 2 built-in garages, and a maid's room with lavatory in the basement. Lovely large fenced yard with high shade trees. Custom built by the present owner of 16-inch select quarry stone—it comprises the best of materials and workmanship.

To Reach: Turn West off 16th Street on Allison St., left on Argyle Terrace to our sign.

Industry in Rural Retreat

Back-to-the-Land Move Reverses War Trend

A SHIFT of population from metropolitan centers back to rural and small-town areas is becoming apparent.

This trend definitely began last December and is steadily gaining impetus, according to research conducted by the Construction Research Bureau of New York, clearing house for building information, in conjunction with the Twentieth Century Fund, Inc.

The voluminous report just published by the Twentieth Century Fund revealed that in the decade between 1930 and 1940 the move to the cities slowed to a virtual stop, gained impetus during the war, and now has reversed itself with a slow but steady movement back to rural and suburban areas.

In 1790 the rural population of the Nation was 4.9 per cent of the total, with urban at 5.1 per cent. Fifty years later the figures were 89.2 and 10.8 respectively. The next 50 years, however, showed a tremendous change percentage-wise with farm population dropping to 64.9 and urban rising to 35.1. Then in 1940 rural areas held 43.5 per cent of the population and urban areas 56.5 per cent.

In the decade between 1930 and 1940, the shift in population almost stopped. In 1930, census figures showed that 43.8 per cent of the American people lived in rural areas. Ten years later the figure stood at 43.5.

War Speeds Movement

WITH the coming of the war, the rate of movement to urban areas was accelerated considerably. How much is not definitely known, but it is known that six or seven months ago the movement set in the other way.

Several factors are responsible, the Construction Research Bureau said yesterday. Farmers are enjoying greater prosperity than ever before and people with a farm background have returned to the land to take part in the current land boom.

Closings of thousands of war plants in the large centers also has helped reverse the population shift. Many workers attracted to these factories from small communities and farms by high wartime pay have been unable to find a place in peacetime industry at comparable wages. Lowered take-home pay, rising living costs and the housing shortage—both far more acute in metropolitan centers than in smaller communities—is sending a steady stream of people back to rural areas.

War veterans, who six months ago were crowding the big cities, likewise are giving up their ideas of metropolitan life. They find jobs difficult to obtain and living in congested areas less pleasant than they thought.

Decentralization of industry is another factor. This movement had started before the war, but has now gained added impetus. Countless small factories are setting up operations in small communities away from high-cost land and high rents. The Army is encouraging this as a protective measure against possible atomic warfare. In some cases, entirely new towns are growing up around concentrations of small factories in suburban areas.

The housing shortage is still acute and will remain so for some years, primarily in the rental category in metropolitan centers, the Construction Research Bureau believes. Builders, however, recently have intensified their efforts to create new rental space, following a change several months ago in Federal policies designed to encourage rental building.

Still a Good Buy

GENERALLY, the home or apartment building being erected today presents a better value than many which were built during the last period of widespread building activity in the 1920s, the bureau finds.

It is true that prices are high in relation to the past, the bureau says, but so are wages in the building trades and material manufacturing plants. This, plus the fact that the public demands and gets as standard equipment and construction many items regarded as luxuries or extras a few years ago, puts a seemingly high price tag on the 1947 home.

Some of the things demanded by purchasers include complete kitchen and laundry equipment, fireplaces, mineral wool insulation to lessen fire danger and at the same time bring about lower heating costs and provide cooler living quarters in summer, large picture windows, top quality materials throughout and many other refinements that were seldom considered in years past.

Builders and real estate dealers are agreed that the Nation needs at least 10 years of intensive building to satisfy the country's housing requirements, the bureau added.

In some areas, construction began to slow down early last spring as a result of high costs. In recent weeks, however, a lowering in some prices has become apparent and building material manufacturers are making every effort to lower them still further by greater efficiency in production and volume output. As a result, building is again showing an acceleration in activity, the report stated.

Check Roof Leaks During Next Hard Thunder Storm

Right now is an ideal time to find out whether the roof on the house leaks because midsummer is a period when extremely heavy and violent rains occur.

During the next hard storm, the wise home owner will go into the attic with a flashlight and carefully examine the underside of the roof and the rafters for traces of moisture. One should not wait until small leaks develop to the point where they damage ceilings and walls, but this is all too often the case.

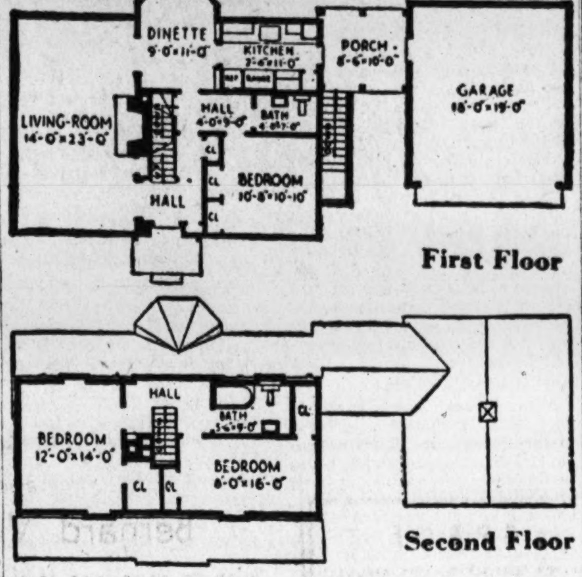
When a leak is discovered, it should be repaired immediately. Set a pan or bucket under it only until a roofer can make a permanent repair. Don't place a receptacle and then forget all about it.

And don't forget that water travels along a beam. A leak is not always exactly at the point where moisture is discovered. Trace it to its origin, and mark the spot.

Manila Smallpox Rate

Before the American occupation of the Philippines there were about 6000 smallpox deaths a year in Manila alone.

Yesterday's Charm, Today's Convenience



THIS house and garage ensemble could be made a home for any American family anywhere because of its design, its arrangement, its conveniences, and its completeness.

Place it in almost any setting—out in the field or in a wooded spot—and it will immediately nestle into its location and attract attention—first, because of its interesting mass, and then, because of its simple, interesting details found in the dormers, wrought-iron rails, windows and shutters.

The exterior is designed in a modern colonial manner, with the lower portions of the house having siding of clapboard or shakes. The eaves are low to the ground. The dormers, as you can see, are just incidents in the roof, thus maintaining the broad roof lines, a necessary part of the charm of the early American cottage.

The living qualities of this home are noticeable from the first entrance into the front hall, for here you'll find a closet for coats and umbrellas, an interesting colonial stairway to the second floor, and a large cased arch opening to the living room.

The living room is exposed on three sides, with windows so arranged that they're pleasing on the exterior, yet inside permit an interesting arrangement of the furniture. The fireplace wall has been carried out in the early colonial manner, with vertical knotty-pine planks of random width. The same material encases the fireplace, which was the heart of any early home.

75,000 New Homes in June Breaks 20-Year Housing High

A new 20-year high in housing starts and completions was reached last month, the Government announced yesterday.

Continuing the upward climb of the previous months, 75,000 new permanent houses were started in June as compared with 72,500 in May of this year and 64,100 in June, 1946.

During the first half of 1947 a total of 358,800 new permanent houses was started, compared with 340,100 during the same period last year. Housing starts in 1946 were the highest since the middle 1920s.

June's completions of 62,800 new permanent units were also a new postwar high, more than double last June's 30,600.

During the first half of 1947 a total of 362,800 new permanents was completed, compared with 128,600 for the same period last year.

Although June was the last month of operation under the Veterans Emergency Housing Act, under which non-residential construction was controlled and aids to production and distribution of materials were provided, Housing Expediter Creedon said he believed the momentum that housing construction attained previous to the ending of the controls would carry through July and into August.

Workmen Face Fall Rush; Urge Repairs Now

VIRTUALLY every home in the country will need some sort of repair or improvement before winter arrives and today is the time such plans should be made and work started. If postponed until autumn, thousands of home owners will be unable to carry out their ideas because contractors and workmen will be tremendously rushed.

Midsummer is generally a slack season for contractors, so at the present time they can do a better job because they are unhurried. Furthermore, many contractors are offering special price inducements in order to keep busy.

Winterproofing Important

New roofing, new siding, repair of masonry, painting and decorating, insulation, weatherstripping and storm windows are only a few of the items that should be considered now.

Winterproofing is probably the most important. Less than 15 per cent of the Nation's homes are insulated, yet if all of them were so protected billions of dollars could be saved each year in fuel costs, according to the United States Bureau of Mines which is conducting an intensive campaign for the winterproofing of all human-occupied structures as a fuel-conservation measure.

Quality Materials Urged

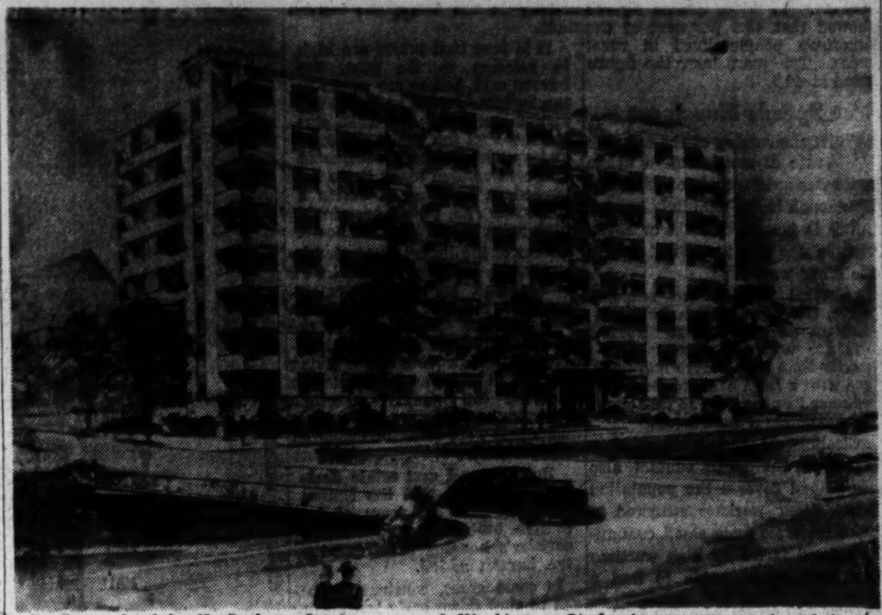
Mineral wool is the most widely used insulation material, according to the Construction Research Bureau of New York, clearing house for building information. In loose or granular form it can be easily blown into walls and ceilings of existing homes or applied in batts or blankets where there is sufficient space for a workman.

Fuel savings as high as 45 per cent have been recorded in houses that were properly insulated, weatherstripped and equipped with storm sash, numerous government, industry and university tests have proved.

In planning any repair, renovation or improvement around the home, only the best materials should be used and only reputable contractors employed, the Construc Research Bureau warns. "If shoddy materials or careless work is permitted, the home owner is simply letting himself in for future trouble," the bureau adds.

Work to Start Next Month

N. W. Gets Luxury Apartments



Rendering by John H. Graham showing proposed Washington Circle Apartments as viewed from K at 25th. Note proposed widening of K st. and future underpass

Construction is expected to start next month on a luxurious 261-unit apartment building at Pennsylvania ave., 25th and K sts. nw. It will be the first elevator-equipped apartment house to receive FHA financing in the District.

The site extends 100 feet on Pennsylvania ave., 200 feet on K and 75 feet on 25th st. Five stores are planned for the Pennsylvania ave. side.

Frank Grad & Sons, architects, said construction bids were being prepared by several local contractors and would be opened on July 29.

Owner is Washington Circle Apartments, Dr. Daniel Gevinson, president.

The building will feature fireproof, reinforced concrete frame construction with brick and stone exterior treatment; year-around air-conditioning, individually controlled for each apartment and large steel casement windows with corner bays to provide maximum view and natural ventilation, supplemented by mechanical air exhaust.

Secretarial telephone service.

Individually soundproofed apartments and sound-absorbing treatment in corridors.

Asphalt tile flooring throughout. Special provision for radio reception and for future television.

The project will be financed under an FHA-insured mortgage through a loan by the Metropolitan Mortgage Co.

Low-Rent Housing Plan Widely Used

Trenton, N. J., July 19.—The Lambert Housing Plan is being used widely in New Jersey for the production of low and moderate rental housing—$35 to $45 for four rooms. The plan is sponsored by the local Housing Authority, financed by private capital invested in low interest bonds, which constitute a lien against the first mortgage, and is constructed by a private contractor selected on the basis of bids.

Land is furnished free by the community, which also grants tax exemption. The project is operated by the local Housing Authority which selects tenants on the basis of income. Lambert Plan construction is the garden type and generally consists of four to six duplexes in a row, with separate entrances to effect savings by elimination of common hall space. Standard plans and specifications are available at far below the usual fee for such documents.

LET'S TALK ABOUT GARDENS

Barring Bad Weather

Season's Half Over, But Best Half Remains

By James H. Beattie

SOME consider gardening only as a spring and early summer operation. The season is now half over, and in many respects the best half remains. There is even time to start from scratch, and, barring very unfavorable weather, have a very profitable garden. There is also opportunity to revamp the spring garden, replacing early crops or weed-infested spots with fall plants, especially those intended for home storage.

Whether the garden is an old or new enterprise, present conditions are very favorable for excellent results. In most cases the soil is well supplied with moisture, yet the rainfall has not been too abundant for good plant growth.

Some of the most important garden crops now have scarcely enough time for proper development before the first severe frost, hence prompt action in planting certain vegetables is essential.

Waiting until a crop is entirely harvested is not always necessary. By planting other vegetables between the rows of those approaching harvest you conserve space and establish the second crop in time to mature before the season's end. Interplanting may easily double the garden yield.

An extensive list of vegetables may still be grown:

HERE'S a trick which helps seeds grow in dry, hot summer days: Soak soil in the drill, and after sowing shade the row with board until the seeds germinate

BEANS—Bush snap beans may be planted with excellent prospects for success until about the middle of August, sometimes later in protected, frost-free locations. Succession plantings 10 to 12 days apart may be made until that time. Medium-sized plantings insure a continuous supply of young, tender beans. Bountiful and Tendergreen are excellent green podded varieties, and Brittle Wax and Pencil Pod Wax are superior wax kinds.

The green varieties require four or five days less to reach edible maturity and this might be considered in making very late plantings where the time element is important. Rotenone and other insecticides will control the Mexican bean beetle.

BEETS are best when quickly grown and a fall crop needs very favorable soil and cultural conditions. Garden compost to lighten the soil and provide plant food, plus careful attention to watering are essential parts of the task. Particular attention must be paid until the plants are up.

Midsummer sun bakes the soil quickly and delicate beet plants cannot emerge unless the surface is kept moist and mellow. Beet seed should be treated with a fungicide dust before sowing. Semesan, Arasan or Cuprocide are commonly used. Detroit Dark Red is an old reliable variety requiring about 60 days for growth. Aug. 15 is a satisfactory planting date.

LATE CABBAGE — Plants should be in the garden now. Fortunately, cabbage will withstand light frosts and continue to develop. It requires 90 to 100 days for satisfactory development and no time should be lost in setting the plants. Wisconsin Savoy is a good late yellow resistant sort. Late Flat Dutch is an old-time variety.

GARDENERS have until August 15 to plant beets. Common varieties require around 60 days for growth

SWEET CORN—It's touch and go whether sweet corn planted now will develop satisfactorily before frost. Much depends on the location. If the site is high and relatively frost free, the chances are excellent. Insect enemies are extremely destructive. The corn earworm, the European cornborer and the Japanese beetle are the three worst. No absolutely effective remedies have been developed, but treatment of the ears three or four days after the silks appear with medicinal mineral oil or with an oil and pyrethrum combination is quite effective against the corn earworm. Rotenone sprays and dusts are used for the European corn-borer and DDT for the Japanese beetle. Very late sweet corn should escape the worst of the latter pest. Most authorities suggest short season varieties of sweet corn for late planting.

Golden Cross bantam and Stowell Evergreen hybrid are excellent yellow and white varieties. Both should reach the edible stage before frost, provided they are planted at once. Treat the seed with a fungicide. Semesan or Arasan are commonly used. Cuprocide should not be employed.

LEAF LETTUCE—The Slobolt variety of loose leaf lettuce may be sowed any time up to September 1. This superior variety was originated by Dr. R. C. Thompson of the Department of Agriculture. It will succeed without going to seed quickly from this time on to frost. The chief requirement is to supply the plants with sufficient water to keep them in a vigorous growing condition. The plants grow large, a foot or more across, and need plenty of room and a rich soil. The lower leaves are removed for use and the plants bear indefinitely.

GARDEN PEAS sometimes produce a fine crop when sowed about the middle of August. Their fall culture is a gamble, but the seed cost is little and the effort may be justified when one has an abundance of garden space. Laxton Progress and Thomas Laxton are satisfactory fall varieties.

RADISHES—Both the short season, and the long season or so-called winter radishes may be easily grown during autumn. About a month is needed to grow the ordinary varieties, but winter radishes require 10 weeks. If planted by the middle of August in winter radishes have plenty of time. The other type should not be planted until September.

SPINACH is commonly grown as a fall garden crop. Being a short season, cool weather plant it should not be seeded until September 1. Virginia Savoy and Old Dominion are standard varieties for fall sowing. The seed should be fungicide treated. The crop will live over winter and yield during early spring, if given some protection.

Numerous other vegetables may still be grown this season. Summer squash, particularly White Bush Scallop or some similar sort, require only seven to eight weeks and may be planted during the latter part of August with excellent success.

Turnips, Kale and Multiplier Onions are other vegetables adapted to fall culture. Turnips yield heavily and need little space.

July Planting Tips

JULY is always an important month in the vegetable garden. Gardens started late or retarded by cold, wet weather need to be encouraged by careful fertilization, cultivation, weed control, thinning and bug eradication.

WHAT NEXT? As soon as your early crops are harvested and the space is empty, the following may be planted in July:

Bush beans—both green and wax, broccoli, beets—for storing, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, Chinese cabbage, carrots, celeriac (knob celery, corn (to July 15), endive, kale, kohl-rabi, lettuce, all types; rutabaga, Swiss chard, turnips (in late July).

IN AUGUST:

Radishes, spinach, leaf lettuce, Chinese cabbage plants, turnips, mustard (for greens).

GIVE soil a lift. When planting a new crop be sure to stimulate the tired soil with a good garden fertilizer. Turn the soil over with a spade and mix thoroughly into the top 3 or 4 inches a pound of fertilizer to each 25-foot of row. Rake level and sow your seed.

PICK them young! Don't wait for your vegetables to grow old. Many crops such as chard and lettuce grow bitter with age; radishes become peppery; beans grow tough; beets become "corky"; over-ripe cabbages tend to split. Harvest broccoli before the bloom buds open and never let it be seed! Cut off the center head with 4 to 5 inches of stem. This gives the side sprouts a chance to develop into edible heads. Zuccini squash is at its best when 6 to 8 inches long and the skin is still tender. Pick cucumbers when young and your vines will produce more fruit. So gather your vegetables at a tender age and cook them soon after bringing them in while they are fresh and flavorful.

SAVE the vitamins. Cook vegetables in little water and do not throw that water down the sink, put it in the soup pot! It may contain more vitamins than the vegetables themselves.

DOWN with surrounding weeds. Wise gardeners cut down weeds which surround their gardens. This prevents weed seeds from blowing into the garden. It also stops insects from hibernating among the perennial weeds. It furthermore checks certain diseases which insects carry into the garden.

Good Mulch Guards Plant's Roots Against Heat, Cold

By Alfred Putz

FEW GARDENERS realize the importance of summer mulching.

A mulch is any substance which, spread upon the soil surface, protects the roots of the plants against heat, cold and drought. Keeping the soil surface well cultivated also serves as a dust mulch, but the work must be repeated after every rain. Where other mulching materials are used no cultivation is needed, thus saving much time and labor.

Of the many mulching materials available peat moss appears to be the favorite. It is inexpensive, obtainable almost everywhere and its dark brown color makes it very inconspicuous. It will not do so well on sloping ground as some others because of its tendency to wash away in case of heavy rainfalls. Mixing it lightly with the topsoil, however, will reduce this danger to a minimum. It may be used either one or two inches thick.

Partly rotted leaves or leaf mold has the same advantages as peat moss, but most gardeners will have difficulty finding a commercial supply of it.

Tobacco stems are the preferred choice for mulching rose beds, but the regular grade is rather hard to handle because of the length of the pieces. The chopped grade, often offered as coarse ground, is much superior.

Do not confuse this with the powdered grade, which is much too fine to serve as a mulching material. These, too, are inconspicuous as a mulch. In addition they have a repellant action upon pests, particularly those which live in the soil. They eventually will rot away, adding valuable humus to the soil, in addition to a little plant food.

Ground-up cocoa bean shells, buckwheat hulls and spent hops are others commercially available in some sections. Even ground corn cobs or any other plant refuse which will not decay too quickly may be used. Straw has long been the choice for mulching the strawberry bed.

Salt hay, so much used for winter mulching, will do as well for summer use except that, like straw, it is rather hard to handle where a neat job is of prime importance. Mulch paper which had gained many stout supporters, is unobtainable at present, but it appears quite possible that aluminum foil will have taken its place by the time the wood-pulp supply has returned to normal.

Broad-leaved evergreens such as rhododendrons and azaleas could not have a better mulch than oak leaves, but peat moss will do where the former are not available. Do not use the leaves from maples, poplars or other soft-leaved trees for these or other plants that require an acid soil, because they result in an alkaline residue after decomposing.

Grass clippings are effective mulch. Put them on in thin layers or dry them before applying.

Whatever material is used, the results are very similar. The mulch shades the soil and acts as an insulation. It keeps the soil cold and preserves soil moisture, because the latter cannot rise to the surface, where it would evaporate in to the air. The soil temperature also is more constant, which is highly beneficial to the soil bacteria primarily responsible for the available plant food.

Currentless Washers Spin Dishes Dry

Ready to install in the modern kitchen, with and without enclosure cabinet, both deluxe and standard type water-powered dishwashing units are now available.

A safety basket which holds dishes, glasses and silver is precision-balanced to spin dishes dry without breakage. Because it requires no motor or electrical connection, it is economical to operate, easy to install.

Midget Water Heater Ideal for Cottages

A 5-gallon capacity water heater that can fit under a washbowl has been designed for use in cottages, trailers, garages wash-rooms and small homes. A heavy duty thermostat control turns on heating elements when water draw-off nears a gallon, assuring constant supply of hot water.

This economical little heater can also serve as an auxiliary tank in large homes where heavy traffic adds a strain on the central water heating system.

Good Quality Paint Will End Problem Of Streaked Siding

Those annoying dark streaks that have appeared on the light colored siding of so many homes during recent years can now be eliminated and prevented from returning.

They were generally caused by poor quality wartime paint on window frames, screens and other trim. Because of wartime restrictions on oil and other top quality materials, the pigments could not be held permanently. Rains gradually washed out the color and spread it down the side of the house.

First-grade paint is available again. Hence, if trim is repainted and the entire house given a coat of paint with a good oil base, the stained surfaces will be concealed and in most cases the difficulty will not recur.

LET'S TALK ABOUT GARDENS

Barring Bad Weather

Season's Half Over, But Best Half Remains

By James H. Beattie

SOME consider gardening only as a spring and early summer operation. The season is now half over, and in many respects the best half remains. There is even time to start from scratch, and, barring very unfavorable weather, have a very profitable garden. There is also opportunity to revamp the spring garden, replacing early crops or weed-infested spots with fall plants, especially those intended for home storage.

Whether the garden is an old or new enterprise, present conditions are very favorable for excellent results. In most cases the soil is well supplied with moisture, yet the rainfall has not been too abundant for good plant growth.

Some of the most important garden crops now have scarcely enough time for proper development before the first severe frost, hence prompt action in planting certain vegetables is essential.

Waiting until a crop is entirely harvested is not always necessary. By planting other vegetables between the rows of those approaching harvest you conserve space and establish the second crop in time to mature before the season's end. Interplanting may easily double the garden yield.

An extensive list of vegetables may still be grown:

HERE'S a trick which helps seeds grow in dry, hot summer days: Soak soil in the drill, and after sowing shade the row with board until the seeds germinate

BEANS—Bush snap beans may be planted with excellent prospects for success until about the middle of August, sometimes later in protected, frost-free locations. Succession plantings 10 to 12 days apart may be made until that time. Medium-sized plantings insure a continuous supply of young, tender beans. Bountiful and Tendergreen are excellent green podded varieties, and Brittle Wax and Pencil Pod Wax are superior wax kinds.

The green varieties require four or five days less to reach edible maturity and this might be considered in making very late plantings where the time element is important. Rotenone and other insecticides will control the Mexican bean beetle.

BEETS are best when quickly grown and a fall crop needs very favorable soil and cultural conditions. Garden compost to lighten the soil and provide plant food, plus careful attention to watering are essential parts of the task. Particular attention must be paid until the plants are up.

Midsummer sun bakes the soil quickly and delicate beet plants cannot emerge unless the surface is kept moist and mellow. Beet seed should be treated with a fungicide dust before sowing. Semesan, Arasan or Cuprocide are commonly used. Detroit Dark Red is an old reliable variety requiring about 60 days for growth. Aug. 15 is a satisfactory planting date.

LATE CABBAGE— Plants should be in the garden now. Fortunately, cabbage will withstand light frosts and continue to develop. It requires 90 to 100 days for satisfactory development and no time should be lost in setting the plants. Wisconsin Savoy is a good late yellow resistant sort. Late Flat Dutch is an old-time variety.

GARDENERS have until August 15 to plant beets. Common varieties require around 60 days for growth

SWEET CORN—It's touch and go whether sweet corn planted now will develop satisfactorily before frost. Much depends on the location. If the site is high and relatively frost free, the chances are excellent. Insect enemies are extremely destructive. The corn earworm, the European cornborer and the Japanese beetle are the three worst. No absolutely effective remedies have been developed, but treatment of the ears three or four days after the silks appear with medicinal mineral oil or with an oil and pyrethrum combination is quite effective against the corn earworm. Rotenone sprays and dusts are used for the European corn-borer and DDT for the Japanese beetle. Very late sweet corn should escape the worst of the latter pest. Most authorities suggest short season varieties of sweet corn for late planting.

Golden Cross bantam and Stowell Evergreen hybrid are excellent yellow and white varieties. Both should reach the edible stage before frost, provided they are planted at once. Treat the seed with a fungicide. Semesan or Arasan are commonly used. Cuprocide should not be employed.

LEAF LETTUCE—The Slobolt variety of loose leaf lettuce may be sowed any time up to September 1. This superior variety was originated by Dr. R. C. Thompson of the Department of Agriculture. It will succeed without going to seed quickly from this time on to frost. The chief requirement is to supply the plants with sufficient water to keep them in a vigorous growing condition. The plants grow large, a foot or more across, and need plenty of room and a rich soil. The lower leaves are removed for use and the plants bear indefinitely.

GARDEN PEAS sometimes produce a fine crop when sowed about the middle of August. Their fall culture is a gamble, but the seed cost is little and the effort may be justified when one has an abundance of garden space. Laxton Progress and Thomas Laxton are satisfactory fall varieties.

RADISHES—Both the short season, and the long season or so-called winter radishes may be easily grown during autumn. About a month is needed to grow the ordinary varieties, but winter radishes require 10 weeks. If planted by the middle of August in winter radishes have plenty of time. The other type should not be planted until September.

SPINACH is commonly grown as a fall garden crop. Being a short season, cool weather plant it should not be seeded until September 1. Virginia Savoy and Old Dominion are standard varieties for fall sowing. The seed should be fungicide treated. The crop will live over winter and yield during early spring, if given some protection.

Numerous other vegetables may still be grown this season. Summer squash, particularly White Bush Scallop or some similar sort, require only seven to eight weeks and may be planted during the latter part of August with excellent success.

Turnips, Kale and Multiplier Onions are other vegetables adapted to fall culture. Turnips yield heavily and need little space.

July Planting Tips

JULY is always an important month in the vegetable garden. Gardens started late or retarded by cold, wet weather need to be encouraged by careful fertilization, cultivation, weed control, thinning and bug eradication.

WHAT NEXT? As soon as your early crops are harvested and the space is empty, the following may be planted in July:

Bush beans—both green and wax, broccoli, beets—for storing, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, Chinese cabbage, carrots, celeriac (knob celery, corn (to July 15), endive, kale, kohl-rabi, lettuce, all types; rutabaga, Swiss chard, turnips (in late July).

IN AUGUST:

Radishes, spinach, leaf lettuce, Chinese cabbage plants, turnips, mustard (for greens).

GIVE soil a lift. When planting a new crop be sure to stimulate the tired soil with a good garden fertilizer. Turn the soil over with a spade and mix thoroughly into the top 3 or 4 inches a pound of fertilizer to each 25-foot of row. Rake level and sow your seed.

PICK them young! Don't wait for your vegetables to grow old. Many crops such as chard and lettuce grow bitter with age; radishes become peppery; beans grow tough; beets become "corky"; over-ripe cabbages tend to split. Harvest broccoli before the bloom buds open and never let it be seed! Cut off the center head with 4 to 5 inches of stem. This gives the side sprouts a chance to develop into edible heads. Zuccini squash is at its best when 6 to 8 inches long and the skin is still tender. Pick cucumbers when young and your vines will produce more fruit. So gather your vegetables at a tender age and cook them soon after bringing them in while they are fresh and flavorful.

SAVE the vitamins. Cook vegetables in little water and do not throw that water down the sink, put it in the soup pot! It may contain more vitamins than the vegetables themselves.

DOWN with surrounding weeds. Wise gardeners cut down weeds which surround their gardens. This prevents weed seeds from blowing into the garden. It also stops insects from hibernating among the perennial weeds. It furthermore checks certain diseases which insects carry into the garden.

Good Mulch Guards Plant's Roots Against Heat, Cold

By Alfred Putz

FEW GARDENERS realize the importance of summer mulching. A mulch is any substance which, spread upon the soil surface, protects the roots of the plants against heat, cold and drought. Keeping the soil surface well cultivated also serves as a dust mulch, but the work must be repeated after every rain. Where other mulching materials are used no cultivation is needed, thus saving much time and labor.

Of the many mulching materials available peat moss appears to be the favorite. It is inexpensive, obtainable almost everywhere and its dark brown color makes it very inconspicuous. It will not do so well on sloping ground as some others because of its tendency to wash away in case of heavy rainfalls. Mixing it lightly with the topsoil, however, will reduce this danger to a minimum. It may be used either one or two inches thick.

Partly rotted leaves or leaf mold has the same advantages as peat moss, but most gardeners will have difficulty finding a commercial supply of it.

Tobacco stems are the preferred choice for mulching rose beds, but the regular grade is rather hard to handle because of the length of the pieces. The chopped grade, often offered as coarse ground, is much superior.

Do not confuse this with the powdered grade, which is much too fine to serve as a mulching material. These, too, are inconspicuous as a mulch. In addition they have a repellant action upon pests, particularly those which live in the soil. They eventually will rot away, adding valuable humus to the soil, in addition to a little plant food.

Ground-up cocoa bean shells, buckwheat hulls and spent hops are others commercially available in some sections. Even ground corn cobs or any other plant refuse which will not decay too quickly may be used. Straw has long been the choice for mulching the strawberry bed.

Salt hay, so much used for winter mulching, will do as well for summer use except that, like straw, it is rather hard to handle where a neat job is of prime importance. Mulch paper which had gained many stout supporters, is unobtainable at present, but it appears quite possible that aluminum foil will have taken its place by the time the wood-pulp supply has returned to normal.

Broad-leaved evergreens such as rhododendrons and azaleas could not have a better mulch than oak leaves, but peat moss will do where the former are not available. Do not use the leaves from maples, poplars or other soft-leaved trees for these or other plants that require an acid soil, because they result in an alkaline residue after decomposing.

Grass clippings are effective mulch. Put them on in thin layers or dry them before applying.

Whatever material is used, the results are very similar. The mulch shades the soil and acts as an insulation. It keeps the soil cold and preserves soil moisture, because the latter cannot rise to the surface, where it would evaporate in to the air. The soil temperature also is more constant, which is highly beneficial to the soil bacteria primarily responsible for the available plant food.

Currentless Washers Spin Dishes Dry

Ready to install in the modern kitchen, with and without enclosure cabinet, both deluxe and standard type water-powered dishwashing units are now available.

A safety basket which holds dishes, glasses and silver is precision-balanced to spin dishes dry without breakage. Because it requires no motor or electrical connection, it is economical to operate, easy to install.

Midget Water Heater Ideal for Cottages

A 5-gallon capacity water heater that can fit under a washbowl has been designed for use in cottages, trailers, garages wash-rooms and small homes. A heavy duty thermostat control turns on heating elements when water draw-off nears a gallon, assuring constant supply of hot water.

This economical little heater can also serve as an auxiliary tank in large homes where heavy traffic adds a strain on the central water heating system.

Good Quality Paint Will End Problem Of Streaked Siding

Those annoying dark streaks that have appeared on the light colored siding of so many homes during recent years can now be eliminated and prevented from returning.

They were generally caused by poor quality wartime paint on window frames, screens and other trim. Because of wartime restrictions on oil and other top quality materials, the pigments could not be held permanently. Rains gradually washed out the color and spread it down the side of the house.

First-grade paint is available again. Hence, if trim is repainted and the entire house given a coat of paint with a good oil base, the stained surfaces will be concealed and in most cases the difficulty will not recur.

This Week's Theatrical Forecast—Fair, Chilly and Nostalgic

Ella Raines, the allure at the top, is one of the girls of "Brute Force," opening Wednesday at Keith's. The daring cutie at right is Betty Hutton, star of "The Perils of Pauline," the Earle's current comedy

These ensemble lassies of "Oklahoma!" all know "Laurey." They are all, in short, understudies to the well-loved musical's heroine, though only one has had the chance to prove it. In the surrey are Bonnie Murray and Marilyne Hanseon. Standees, in the usual order, are La Verne Burden, Dalors Bennett and Katherine Worrell. The musical opens its second return engagement at the National tomorrow night at 8:20 "sharp" for a four-week stay

Patents on Dips And Bumps Beset Drive-In Movies

By Richard L. Coe

NOBODY'S mentioned it, but one of the fastest growing stepchildren of the drayma is this auto drive-in theater business.

January '48 will see twice as many of these as there were a year before. The end of this year there'll probably be about 200 of 'em from coast to coast, with room for about 1000 cars each.

The Marine drive in for a movie

Washington's holding its own. There'll be a new one opening up around Aug. 1 across from the Washington Airport on Route 1.

Only last week that galloping local impresario, Sidney Lust, opened one at Beltsville, Md., on the Washington - Baltimore highway. The one everyone knows best in these parts, though, is E. M. Loew's on the Richmond highway, three miles below Alexandria. He has 12 more from New England to Florida.

Loew's—no relation to the theater chain relative of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—has been a favorite of Washington families since it was opened eight summers ago. Family parties are always the big draw—with kids admitted to its 1000-car acreage free—if accompanied by a car and paying adult! This is the big gimmick on the Richmond highway and it pays off: Elsewhere the kids have to pay admission along with adults.

Funniest angle to the auto-theater set-up is the patent situation. It's probably tough on the people involved, but from the outside it's plain screwy.

Cars are parked at an angle so that the nose points up to the screen. This is achieved by either an upped-bump for the front wheels or a sunken hole for the rear.

There is a patent for the forward bump, for which the Loew organization has been paying royalties up till recently. There also seems to be someone in the field who thinks that if a hole is dug for the rear wheels, HE ought to get a rake-off. The "bump" people are said to be pretty choosey about their customers and won't sell bumps to everybody. The legal gobbledegook for this is "longitudinally tilting an automobile." So you see, things are tough all over.

Then there's the little matter of loud speakers. You've no idea how whipped up the auto-impressarios can get over this one.

Managr Don King of Loew's, for instance, is definitely a speaker-on-a-pole man. This means there's a muffled speaker attached to a stand about car-height. It funnels

West Mixes Slot Machines and Opera

Central City Booms Again

By Lucius Beebe

CENTRAL CITY, Colo., July 19.—Once a year at Central City, high in the storied ramparts of the Colorado Rockies, they punch a watchman's clock that protects the legendary past. The clock punching takes the form of a six-week opera season which for technical excellence is probably second only to New York's Metropolitan and which is adorned with pleasant trappings of frontier festival and Victorian panache.

A great deal of Central's opera season concerns itself with routs and balls and frolic whose relationship to the cultural humanities is not at first glance discernible.

An appreciable part of the opera association's revenue derives from such as slot machines, Cousin Jake picnics and the three splendid and spacious bars in the adjacent Teller House.

But it is all sanctioned by tradition and constitutes the most pretentious summer stock played anywhere in the United States.

This summer's scuffle with the muses centers around lavishly upholstered productions of "Fidelio" and "Martha," but the formal and glittering audiences are only a small portion of the thousands who drive up the Canyon Road from Blackhawk to participate, if only vicariously, and savor the atmosphere of the bonanza times of the Colorado '60s when Gilpin County was reputed to embrace the richest square mile on earth.

The gold furniture bought for Haw Tabor's Baby Doe is lovingly burnished and furnished forth behind plush cords at the Teller House.

"Cousin Jack pasties," the hot meat pies which once were the universal contents of the lunch pails of the Cornish miners, are on every lunch counter.

The previously uninitiated are told how, right here in Eureka Street, Horace Greeley was charged $5 for a shave by the Count Marat, the stylish barber, and, alarmed and excited by this scandalous tariff, then and there uttered his immortal injunction of the youth of the land to go West, and that instanter.

Room for Competition

THIS season the Teller House bar, long regarded as the only polite oasis suitable for ladies and gentlemen in formal evening attire, was challenged in its supremacy by an enterprising widow, Mrs. Emmy Wilson. Formally the proprietor of an innocuous tintype parlor adjacent to Williams's Stables, Mrs. Wilson acquired a property around the corner and promptly opened the Glory Hole Saloon with Victorian embellishments.

When her premises were visited from their liveried limousines by Mrs. Spencer Penrose, the grand old lady of Colorado society, and Mrs. A. E. Carlton, a drawingroom arbiter of practically consular authority, who genteely sipped sherries amid the backroom tumults, it was universally acknowledged that the Glory Hole had arrived and the Widow Wilson's fortune was practically assured.

Then there was the affair of the slot machines. Splitting on a 50-50 basis with the entrepreneurs who furnish these ingenious aids to bankruptcy, the Opera Association and its head, Rick Ricketson, were dismayed to learn that there was talk of enforcing Colorado's antigambling laws with a consequent loss to the cause of the muses of between ten and twenty thousand potential dollars.

At the last moment, however, cooler heads prevailed and a vast vanload of dime, two-bit and four-bit machines rolled up to the Teller House and most people seemed enchanted to go broke in their service.

On this opening night, there was no single person in the audience in street clothes, and multi-hued dinner jackets were here and there replaced by tailcoats of antique pattern and remote vintage.

The Governor, William L. Knous, officially presided at ceremonies. All the right Reeds, Verners, Boettchers, Evanses and MacFarlanes bowed satisfactorily to one another across the tiny auditorium.

First Nighters

IN THE first night stalls where once the pioneers had tossed minted gold to Modjeska were New York's Don Oenslager, who had designed the sets for both "Fidelio" and "Martha," and Mrs. William Francis Gibbs of Metropolitan Opera fame. Present, too, were the Eugene Lillys of Colorado Springs, Miss Caroline Bankroft, Colorado antiquarian and historial of Georgetown and Quigg Newton, the grand new Mayor of Denver.

Opera at Central will continue through July 26. The remainder of the stand will be given over to a special importation of "Harvey," with Frank Fay and other members of the original Broadway cast.

Broadway Notes

British Musical Heads Shubert's List of Imports

NEW YORK, July 19 (AP).—Lee Shubert, whose enthusiastic prowling among the world's show shops belies his venerable years, bustled off to Europe for a look at what London and Paris have to offer in the way of theatrical lend-lease and came back with a list which must be described conservatively as a dandy.

LEE SHUBERT

He managed to buy the Broadway rights to the highly successful London musical, "Piccadilly Hayride," will bring the production here in toto: cast, scenery, props and all. Starring Sid Fields, it has been running three years.

Another popular musical, "Under the Counter," also will be produced here by Lee and his brother, J. J. Shubert, who head the richest theatrical corporation on Broadway. A third tune show, Ivor Novello's "Perchance to Dream," is on the lengthy Shubert agenda.

In Paris, the Shuberts acquired "La Belle De Cadiz," with music by Francis Lopez and lyrics by Maurice Vandan. A comedy, "Fools Rush In," and a thriller, "Power Without Glory," also are on the Shubert schedule.

Another "Ziegfeld Follies" is on the front Shubert burner for the approaching season, as well as a comedy called "The Scuddievaigs;" an operetta about Russian Composer Tschaikowsky, entitled "The Lonely Heart," utilizing the composer's music to new lyrics.

Stickney-Lindsay Fan Feels 'Unfaithful' About It

British 'Father' Pleases Gallico

By Paul Gallico

LONDON, July 19.—Paying a visit to the British production of "Life With Father," playing here, I sat furtively, looking nervously over my shoulder, and came away with an odd feeling that somehow I had been unfaithful to Dorothy Stickney and Howard Lindsay, who originated the roles of Vinnie and Father more than six years ago.

Looka, Howard and Dorothy, I didn't mean any harm, or disloyalty. I got lured into the theater by Firth Shephard, the English producer, who said I ought to hear all the actors, including the four red-headed Day progeny, speaking the lines with British accents, making it practically "Life With Pa-PAH."

To my horror, I found myself settling down and enjoying the show all over again. (I have seen it a half dozen times). It must be a thumping good play and an ageless one. I can hardly wait to catch it as "La Vie Avec Papa" in France, "Das Leben Mit Vater" in the American zone, and should the iron curtain ever lift as "Ain't Life With the Old Manovitch and Everything Else Just Awful?" when it gets to Moscow.

I loved Sophie Stewart and Leslie Banks who played mother and father here. This is awful! What am I going to tell Dorothy and Howard when I get back?

Accent Not Harmful

THE effect of the British accent on a beloved American play is not as strange as you might expect, since you are literally surrounded by the same kinds of accents. The maids who parade through the Day household are cockneys and drop their aitches, but so does the usherette who shows you to your seat. And if some of the actors occasionally speak as though they had got a piece of hot potato in their mouths and could neither swallow it nor get rid of it, so does everyone sitting around you in the audience and, therefore, the contrast is not particularly marked.

SOPHIE STEWART
. . . Still another Vinnie

The titters, the laughs, the belly roars and the yocks came in exactly the same places and in response to the same lines and situations that they did in New York, night after night. If the English are a humorless folk who cannot see a joke, it certainly is not apparent at this play.

Our American Vinnies, played by, among others, Miss Stickney and Lillian Gish, were slender and delicate. The London version portrayed by Sophie Stewart is buxom and equipped with matronly curves. Her first entrance, therefore, comes as something of a shock. Five minutes later Art takes over. She may not be the Vinnie you knew and loved at home, but she certainly is Vinnie and the Mother of THAT family.

Still Very Alive

PERHAPS you are sorry that they are gone from New York, these heart-warming, chuckle-provoking play-people, who, although the long years passed, never seemed to grow older as they told their delightful comedy of American family life.

Take some comfort then, for though they are vanished from the

30 Years A'Growing'

Versatile Waring Gang Guides Public's Taste

By John Crosby

THIRTY years ago, Fred Waring took his Banjazzatra, a name he has probably lived to regret, to Altoona, Pa., to play his first out-of-town date. The band was composed of Waring, his brother, Tom, Poley McClintock and the late Fred Buck, all of Tyrone, Pa. Since that time the organization has greatly expanded, the out-of-town dates are countless, but the spirit of the original enterprise remains largely unchanged.

Waring has considerably more than gray hair to show for his 30 years in the music field. Over the years he has gone his own way—leading popular taste, not following it or pandering to it. He is one of the most imitated of band leaders.

The original band was a rather odd bunch. The boys could not only play instruments, they were adept at novelty numbers, musical pranks of all sorts and could, if pressed, deliver a stirring rendition of a hymn. In that respect, the orchestra hasn't changed. Waring persistently hires men who can do more than play in the band. His musicians can double in the glee club, do comedy bits and, if necessary, animal noises. He has never needed guest stars. The outfit is full of talented musicians. Fifteen members have been with him for 20 or more years.

His Glee Club Is Tops

PERHAPS Waring's most important contribution to popular music is the glee club. It's been imitated on a dozen other programs, but no other aggregation approaches the versatility, smoothness and sheer perfection of Waring's. It has had an immense influence on choral singing throughout the country. Today Waring's choral arrangements are used by 1500 music educators in daily classroom work. Many of the special musical programs in schools and colleges have been directed by Waring's assistants. This summer 400 music educators from 40 States, Canada and China are attending the Waring Musical Workshop at Shawnee, Pa., to try to discover how Waring does it.

FRED WARING

All this is meant to serve as an introduction to Waring's two summer programs. His morning program (WRC-NBC 11 a. m. Eastern Daylight Time, Mondays through Fridays) continues unchanged. In addition, Waring has taken over the half hour spot usually occupied by Fibber McGee and Molly (WRC-NBC 9:30 p. m. Eastern Daylight Time, Tuesdays).

There is little difference between the morning and evening programs. A Waring production is a finished bit of musical showmanship. There is variety, pace and excellent orchestration. But above all, the boys seem to be enjoying themselves. I guess that's the secret.

How Henry Does It

ONE way to finish a column is to condense a radio script. The most successful column I ever wrote was a condensation of Fred Allen and Tallulah Bankhead's now famous parody on breakfast programs. This has been acclaimed as my masterpiece by many persons who forget, or are too polite to mention, that I wrote only the introductory paragraph.

On one of his programs, Henry Morgan interviewed several regular give-away contestants, primarily to discover how they pass the summer months when the give-aways go off the air. Go ahead, Henry. You're on the air:

MORGAN: What is your name, please?

SADIE: Sadie Doubledrip, I come from Hoboken. Occupation housewife and I'll select Number 5. Different varieties of plant lice. What's the first question?

MORGAN: No, no, Mrs. Doubledrip. This is not a quiz program. We give nothing away here.

SADIE: Trapped!

Second Time Around

Sylvia's Back for Another Turn

SHE'S BACK in pictures, is Sylvia Sydney, shown here with her husband of a few months, Carlton Alsop. They used to say Sylvia never smiled. Well, look at that smile

By Hedda Hopper

HOLLYWOOD, July 19.—About nine years ago Sylvia Sidney shook the dust of Hollywood off her tiny feet and departed for New York. She was a mighty unhappy girl and made no bones about her dissatisfaction with the movies, everything pertaining to them, and the ends to which her career in celluloid city had come. She thought she was through with Hollywood. So did we. Eventually movie fans began to ask, "What ever happened to Sylvia Sidney.

Like most stage actresses, Sylvia had arrived in our town filled with idealism toward her profession. She plugged hard through a series of mediocre films before landing leads in such notable pictures as "City Streets," with Gary Cooper; "Fury" (the famous anti-lynching film), with Spencer Tracy; "Street Scene," and "An American Tragedy."

It was inevitable that she'd be typed by such grim dramas. And soon Hollywood had set its seal upon her. Sylvia's face, which was remarkably adept at registering frustration, spiritual harassment, and a sense of impending doom, was her undoing. Producers saw her only as the perfect foil for the wiles of gangsters, the poor girl with decent instincts who fought against her slum environments, the sweetheart of men made criminals by circumstances. It got so that a smile on Sylvia's face was rarer than a millionaire in Moscow.

Son Named for Steinbeck's Jody

BUYING herself a huge farm in New Jersey she settled down for a little domestic tranquility. Occasionally she returned to Broadway for a play. And twice she came back to Hollywood for pictures, but gave no indication that she'd changed her basic attitude toward the town.

Meanwhile she met and married Luther Adler. They had a son, Jody, who was named after the boy in John Steinbeck's story, "The Red Pony." Then more than ever did it seem that Sylvia was through with pictures but her son, curiously enough, was responsible for her return to California.

"It was a question of either taking Jody to Florida or bringing him here for the sake of his health," she told us. "So we came here, where I knew many people. I wasn't particularly interested in making any more pictures; but Bill and Jimmy Cagney wanted me for 'Blood on the Sun.' So what would you do? I played in it, of course. Then they signed me to a long-term contract which has four more years to run. It looks as though I'll be here, body and soul, for a considerable time."

Some Changes Made

YES, Sylvia's back in Hollywood as big as life, but not, as the saying goes, twice as sassy. She's a changed girl if I ever met one, and I've met a few. In the last few years she's sold her New Jersey farm, divorced Luther Adler, married Carlton Alsop; and they've bought themselves a lovely home in Beverly Hills.

I asked her to explain her shift in attitude toward our town.

She said: "I want you to understand this: I never really had any quarrel with Hollywood. My viewpoint in the old days was the result of personal troubles and confusion—not the picture business. It was myself, not the town, that was at fault. Now I only hope that I've resumed my picture career like a grownup girl rather than like somebody whose being chased by cops.

"Don't you think you'll be wanting to pull out for the stage again before long?" asked I.

"It makes no difference what I want," she grinned. "I'm tied down here for at least four years. Besides, with so many little theaters opening up on the West Coast, there'll be plenty of opportunity around here for those who crave going back on the stage.

"To me the theater is like violin exercises for a violinist. It gives you a chance to experiment—which movies don't, and probably can't afford to. Now, for instance, when I try a radically different role I don't know whether I can bring it off or not. The thing to do then is find out. But how? A motion picture producer isn't going to risk a million dollars in seeing whether or not I can play a certain part. That's why they keep shoving stars in the same type of roles—the kind in which they've proved their ability. And that's how actors get typed.

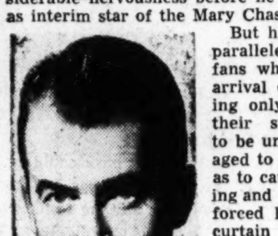
"That's why I think the theater is important to Hollywood—and its stars. And that's how I hope to make use of it in the future.

"Just now there's a big clamor on in Hollywood for stories. Why? I don't care how many times you remake 'Madame X,' for an example; so long as its remade well it'll make money. Quality is what counts.

"Perhaps I'm not qualified to judge on this score, however. I have a few books that I like, and I read them over and over. It's the same way with pictures. If I find a good one I may see it a half dozen times."

Stewart Scores Success As Fay's Sub in Harvey

NEW YORK, July 19 (AP).—James Stewart, one of Hollywood's most successful glamor stars, expressed considerable nervousness before he opened the other night as interim star of the Mary Chase comedy, "Harvey."



STEWART

But his pre-curtain shakiness, paralleled by a good many stage fans who resent the occasional arrival of movie players bringing only a celebrated name to their stage activities, proved to be unfounded. Stewart managed to perform in such fashion as to cause quite a bit of cheering and insistent applause which forced him to make a pleasant curtain speech thanking everyone on stage and off, including his invisible rabbit playmate, "Harvey."

The star's timidity had been caused by the fact that he had been away from the legitimate stage for 12 years, during which he became a first-line Hollywood star and later a colonel with a reputation as a combat flying officer.

In the first place, he was taking a part played by Frank Fay, a gentleman whose rich vaudeville talents seemed to suit the role of the rabbit's pal exactly as Miss Chase had intended in her Pulitzer Prize winner. Secondly, his lengthy lapse from stage technique was a handicap, and finally, he faced the odious parallels which might be drawn by critics who had heaped praise on Fay.

Truthfully, Stewart does not manage all the effortless emphasis which Fay brings to the part, but he nonetheless proves his dozen years away from Broadway did not diminish his natural acting talents.

Show Time on Stage and Screen

STAGE

Olney—"The Late Christopher Bean," ZaSu Pitts in a delightful evening with the Sidney Howard Comedy, at 8:45.

SCREEN

Earle—"The Perils of Pauline," Betty Hutton gives a lot of laughs in this comedy about Pearl White, the early serial queen, at 1:10, 3:20, 5:30, 7:40 and 9:50 p. m.

Chatterton Role

Ruth Plays 'Little Foxes' Out at Olney

Ruth Chatterton, one of the most accomplished of our actresses and perhaps best known for her unrivaled "Madame X," will tread the boards at Olney beginning Tuesday night, as the wickedly clever Regina of Lillian Hellman's much-acclaimed drama, "The Little Foxes."

This gripping story of a for-keeps battle between sister and brothers, wife and husband, is played against the background of a charming old Southern home in the year 1900. Only the year and the setting, however, are Victorian. Such greed, cruelty and unscrupulous ambition have, unfortunately, been with the world since its beginning and only the most optimistic of Utopians would question its continuance.

Picture a peaceful (to most outward appearances) Southern family. Then look into their drawing room and see that they're really like. First, there's Ben (Jabez Grey), possessive and scheming. His brother is the cruel and arrogant Oscar (Richard Briggs), who wed a cotton mill along with his wife, Birdie (Ruth White). The result of this union is the weak and unprincipled Leo (James Karen). Then meet the meanest and craftiest of the lot, Regina Giddens, who stops at absolutely nothing to gain her ends.

The titantic family struggle centers around a proposed cotton mill and the money needed to finance it. This exists in the form of bonds belonging to Horace (Joseph Hardy), Regina's almost-estranged husband, who is very ill. In fact, aside from her ailing father, Regina's daughter, Alexander (Daphne Elliott) is just about the only decent one of the lot. How Regina wins the family battle, and 75 per cent of the business, rather than the proposed 33 1/3 per cent, is a spine-chilling affair.

Charles S. Dubin is directing. Randall Brooks does the settings.

'Foolish Notion' Is Next for Va. Barn

"Foolish Notion," the Philip Barry play which served Tallulah Bankhead for two recent seasons, is the Cross Roads Theater's next offering. The play opens Tuesday evening in the old red barn five miles out the Columbia Pike from Washington.

Kay Knockey and Warner Schreiner have two of the leads, sharing the spotlight with Aurelia Sweeley, in the all-important part of the 12-year-old daughter of the heroine.

Other members in Director Cecil Willis' cast are Helen Ray, Murray Sheehan, Robert Tuttle, Sue Fullilove, Jane Robson and Jean Wagner.

How Henry Morgan Does It

MORGAN: But since you're here, perhaps you'll tell us something about your experiences with give-away prizes.

SADIE: I've been on 'em all. "Take it or Else," "People Are People," "Tell the Truth or Get Your Arm Busted." But my biggest honor came when I was picked for the highest honor an American girl can receive.

MORGAN: And what was that?

SADIE: I was chosen "Schlemiel for a Day." I was struck dumb for a moment.

MORGAN: I'm glad you got over it.

SADIE: Then on this "Truth or Get Your Arm Busted" program I won second prize. I hadda go down in a coal mine and stay there until I mined a ton of coal.

MORGAN: That's a fine prize.

SADIE: Yeah, but the lucky dame that won first prize, they sent her up in a rocket—sailing into interplanetary space.

MORGAN: What happened when she got back?

SADIE: Got back? That would spoil the fun.

MORGAN: Well, I know you're going to have a long summer with all those shows off the air. What do you plan to do?

SADIE: Housework! It's been piling up all winter.

MORGAN will devote the rest of the summer to playing with his miniature railroad, but he'll be back in the fall, presumably same time, same station and, despite all those remarks about Eversharp, same sponsor.

boards at home, they are still alive, thriving here, in the Savoy Theater, and they are not amongst strangers.

Father continues to stamp on the floor at breakfast when the coffee is undrinkable, Vinnie still carries on her desperate duel with her accounts, Clarence, jr., is yet involved in his harrowing struggle to acquire a new suit of clothes with which to impress pretty Mary Skinner and when the curtain falls to cheers and applause from the people who love this family as much as did we, poor father is still marching forth to his baptism.

Drama Opens Tonight at C. U.

"Kingdom of the Blind," a melodrama by Frank Ford, will be the second offering of the Catholic University Playwriting Festival. The play, dealing with diabolical possession, opens tonight for a three-week run.

Ford, a graduate student in C. U.'s speech and drama department, did his undergraduate work at Fordham, where he received his degree in 1941. While there he wrote several one-act plays. "Equation Unsolved" won the one-act contest at the university in 1940. Victor Moore and William Gaxton awarded the prize.

In 1941 Ford's "Lucifer at Large" became the only play to receive a return engagement at Fordham. It was published last year by Baker Plays, Inc.

After leaving the university, Ford was commissioned in the Navy in 1942 and served in the Pacific as a lieutenant on a naval gunboat.

Ford has a high scholastic record and in 1941 won the Cardinal Spellman Award.

"Kingdom of the Blind," his first full-length play, is being directed by John F. Baird. The settings have been designed by Martin Fallon.

Young Man Solid With Horn

THERE'S a miniature Harry James out Greenbelt way.

Jimmy Attick, a blond enthusiast of 6, turns his nose up at blowing bubbles in favor of drawing hot licks from a man-sized trumpet. He's solid on the cornet, too.

Six months ago the horn-tooting son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert S. Attick, 1-A Gardenway, couldn't play a note. But then Jimmy's big brother, Buddy, 10, began to play the B-flat clarinet for the 75-piece Greenbelt Community Band. That changed Jimmy's life.

He took to following the band around town. Dana Garrett, director, was so impressed by the musical longings of the self-made mascot that he began giving Jimmy lessons.

His efforts have been well rewarded. Jimmy has even soloed at concerts in the town center.

Currently, the pint-sized musician is brushing up his rendition of the popular "Linda"—and dreaming of the day when he can give out with it on a "golden trumpet all my own."

The boy's father, a police sergeant on the Greenbelt force, heads the parents' board of the Greenbelt Community Board. Although Papa Attick doesn't play himself, Jimmy's musical ambitions are strictly in the groove from his point of view.

Music in the Air

Smallens Takes Over Podium

ALEXANDER SMALLENS, making his seventh appearance at the Watergate, takes over the National Symphony podium this week. Last month Smallens was named music director of Radio City Music Hall, an assignment which is in keeping with a distinguished career in opera, symphonic music and ballet.

For tonight's "Symphony Night" his program will include the Bach-Walton Suite, "The Wise Virgins;" Franck's symphonic poem, "Redemption;" Prelude to Act III from "Lohengrin," and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Tuesday night brings Smallens' annual all-Gershwin program. A personal friend of Gershwin, he was selected by the composer to conduct "Porgy and Bess" and is a master of Gershwin interpretation. Sidney Foster, young American winner of both the MacDowell prize and Leventritt Award, will be soloist in the Concerto in F and Rhapsody in Blue.

Simon Plays Thursday

THURSDAY'S soloist, another young American pianist, Abbey Simon, will play Chopin's Concerto No. 2 in F minor. Simon, like Foster, is a graduate of Philadelphia's Curtis Institute. Shortly after graduation, he won the coveted Naumburg award that carried with it a Town Hall debut. He was given two Carnegie Hall concerts since his Army discharge and has been staff pianist for WQXR under Leon Barzin.

The orchestral portion of the program includes Tchaikovsky's Suite from "The Swan Lake," Wagner's Prelude and Love Death from Tristan and Isolde, three excerpts from "Damnation of Faust" by Berlioz, "Pavane" by Ravel, and "Finlandia" by Sibelius. All concerts begin at 8:30 p. m.

Dorothy Averell, young American violinist will make her fourth appearance at the National Gallery tonight at 8. Her program includes Bach Partita in E major (for violin alone), Prokofieff's Concerto No. 1 in D major, the first Washington performance of David Stanley Smith's "Requiem," two excerpts from Milhaud's "Saudades do Brazil," Falla's "Pantomime" from "El Amor Brujo," and "Lecuona" by Malaguena. Otto Herz will assist her at the piano.

Band Concerts

THE Army Air Forces Band will be conducted by two of its assistant leaders at its Capitol Steps concert tonight at 8. W. O. (j.g.) Samuel Kurtz and CWO Frank Weirauch will take turns on the podium and M/Sgt. Harry Meuser, bassoonist, and M/Sgt. Abrasha Robofsky, baritone, will be soloists.

The U. S. Navy Band will be heard on the Capitol steps tomorrow at 8 p. m.

The U. S. Marine Band will play at the bandstand, Marine Barracks, tomorrow at 8 p. m. Musician Joshua Tyler, harpist, and Musician Paul Gogel, clarinetist, will be soloists tomorrow and again at the Marine Band concert on the Capitol steps Wednesday. The U. S. Army Band will be conducted by Assistant Leader, W. O. Herbert Hoyer on the Capitol steps Friday at 8 p. m.

The following pupils of Edward A. Carey will give their annual recital Tuesday at 8:15 p. m. in Second Baptist Church, 17th and East Capitol sts.: Donna Condon, Shirley Davis, Patsy Eggleston, Charles Hay, C. J. Hay, 2d, Joyce Light, Ainita Lawrence,, Barbara Nuthall, LaRue Pusey Charles Rhodes, Conrad Voegler and Betty Lee White.

A Vesper Song Service will be held this afternoon at 5 at the Second Baptist Church, 3rd st. between H and I sts. nw. Soloists will be Frankie Crowder, Anna Harris and Ellen Ashton, sopranos; Claudia Scott, contralto; Albun Mangrum, tenor, and Henry Crowder, jr., bass.

Victor to Bring Out Album Of 'Four Saints in Three Acts'

A recording and a printing of operas by Virgil Thomson and the late Gertrude Stein have just been announced. RCA Victor will bring out in the fall an album of five 12-inch records with highlights of "Four Saints in Three Acts"; Thomson conducted for the recording, and among the singers are some who appeared in the premier in Hartford in 1934.

Music Press plans, also for fall, the publication of "The Mother of Us All," first performed at Columbia's music festival last spring. Limited and general editions will contain the full text, music, scenario and photographs of author and composer.

New York to See Britten's Second Opera This Fall

Chicago, July 19 (AP).—Benjamin Britten's second opera "The Rape of Lucretia," will be produced in New York this fall or winter, the Chicago Opera Theater announced today.

Giovanni Cardelli, general manager of the opera theater, said the dates or theater had not yet been determined but that he expected a run of at least three weeks.

The opera will tour other cities after the New York presentation, Cardelli said, but the itinerary has not been determined.

Cardelli also announced that the opera theater has exclusive rights for the American premiere of Britten's third opera, "Albert Herring." It will be presented in Chicago this winter.

into your car window all those wonderful things the movie stars say to each other—and their horses, for horses are real favorites in these spots.

People Take 'Em Away

AT THE new Lust place at Beltsville, however, and the soon-to-be-opened Airport Drive-in, the speakers are the kind you lift into the car with you. This is the ultimate shout so far as speakers are concerned, but King doesn't go for 'em.

"People forget, or something, and drive away with 'em," Don reports. "Our chain has tried them and in one theater alone lost over 30 in a couple of months. Then, too, the youngsters get candy and gum on 'em and the next users complain."

Lust, however, points out that the sound of the car-type speaker can be controlled to suit the preferences of the users. So that's another of those arguments drive-in managers haggle about over their midnight beer.

"Whichever you prefer, however," reminds King, "both are better than the way we had to start down here. Originally there were 20 to 30 loudspeakers built around the screen and if the wind shifted, you had to be a lip-reader to know what was what on the screen."

Hard to Get Pictures

Newcomer to the ranks is Paul T. Foley, a lively, knowing 28-year old attorney and certified public accountant. He's got ambitious plans for his Airport Drive-In, pointing out that it is closer to a city than any such theater in the country. He's building with prefab materials, has his fingers crossed for an Aug. 1 opening and through his legal experience knows a lot about the new gold mine.

One of the toughest problems facing these theaters is getting pictures. Exhibitors are reluctant to give what are known as "first" or "second" runs on films which might prove draws to what the "open air" managers delicately describe as "closed-over" theaters, open the year 'round and therefore good steady customers.

"But," Foley remarks, pulling out a handy statistic, "the exhibitors should remember that 65 per cent of the drive-in people wouldn't be attending closed-over theaters. We're really not interfering with closed-overs too much. Over at Airport we're not going to run double features, and we have hopes of getting reasonably new pictures."

And, about daylight saving, you should hear the drive-in managers moan. That extra hour daylight means an hour's loss in business.

But they all agree on one thing: their theaters are swell for the family trade. "Sure," says one of 'em, "we get our smoochers just the way the closed-over theaters do in their last rows. But with us, it's the family crowd that counts. No worry about baby-sitters. Just pile the kids in the car and get going. Or get comfortable with the wife beside you."

Just like M/Sgt. and Mrs. Jesse Morin of Fort Belvoir are doing in our picture accompanying of Loew's Drive-in.

Tuesday's Post Films

The fourth installment of documentary films in the series entitled "Our World," presented by The Post and D. C. Public Library, will be shown Tuesday in the Department of Interior Auditorium, 18th and C sts. nw.

Movies on Tuesday's program include "Handicrafts of India," "The River," and "Prelude to Victory."

Aimless Shooting Seldom Pays Off

The only good pictures ever made by pure mechanics were shots of the big disturbance at Bikini Atoll a year ago. And we can't all pose atomic bombs. A good home-made plan in advance is more reliable.

A good picture, after all, is a plan laid out on film. Many amateurs fumble around with cameras under the false impression that all they have to do is shoot aimlessly. Even if this procedure pays off on the long odds once in a while, a lot of film is wasted in the process. Take your time, and plan those shots.

House Bill Provides Slash of 15% In Tax on Photographic Goods

By Ollie Atkins

OF INTEREST to all working photographers is a bill now before the House Ways and Means Committee which would cut taxes on much photographic equipment.

The present tax rate places a 25 per cent burden on cameras and photographic equipment, 2½ times the highest rate for any other type of manufactured product.

Purpose of the original wartime legislation was to discourage civilian consumption of photographic products, thereby conserving manpower, production facilities and essential materials.

Today, when the need is for increased production, the tax tends to restrict output. It forces those making a living out of photography—studio men, press cameramen, X-ray and documentary photographers—to support a measure never intended to do more than restrict production during wartime.

THE BILL in the House Committee is expected to be reported out favorably this week. It provides that cameras and photographic equipment would be taxed 10 per cent, a reduction of 15 per cent.

Inasmuch as sporting goods, musical instruments and firearms bear a 10 per cent tax, amateur photography hobbists should be willing to pay a similar levy.

The bill affects 15,000 commercial photographers, 4500 photo-finishing companies, 500 motion picture groups (mostly making educational film), 50,000 public schools using visual education, 600 daily newspaper photo departments, scores of magazines, police departments, hundreds of photo engraving plants, doctors and hospitals plus some 20 million amateur snapshooters.

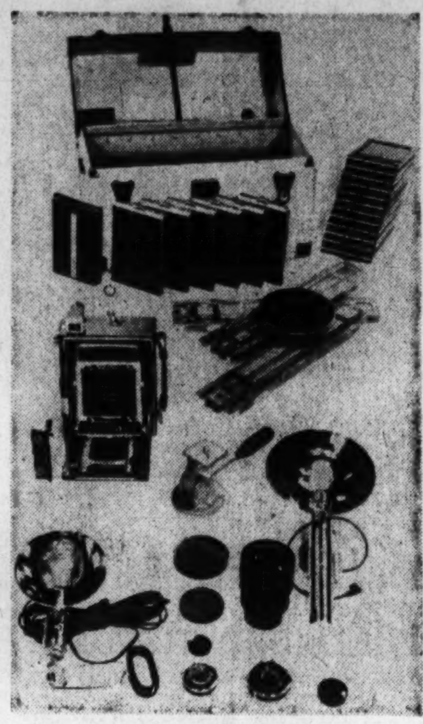
A BILL AUTHORIZING employment of an official photographer for the United States Senate (at $5600 a year) has been introduced by Senator Dennis Chavez (D., N. Mex.). A similar proposal died in committee last year. If it passes chances are Clyde Wilkinson, an oldtimer around the Senate with his camera, will get the job.



THIS IS the gear usually carried by a press photographer. It represents $73.42 in taxes under present laws, which place a 25 per cent levy on everything except camera and carrying case

New 8-Millimeter Projector Built

Continental Products Corp. of Kansas City has announced a new motion picture projector for synchronized sound-on-record with eight-millimeter movies.

A combined project of Eastman Kodak and Wilcox Electric companies, the movie sound 8 makes available the first home sound movies on popular narrow-sized motion picture film.

The device consists of a projector and a record turntable, operated separately by two synchronous electric motors. The needle is set in the groove of the record, and the film is threaded with a synchronization mark set at a specified spot above the gate. When the device is turned on, a thousand-cycle tone recorded on the disc activates a relay in the amplifier which automatically starts the projector at the proper instant.

New Type Meters Show Incident Light

Incident light, a relatively new term in photography, actually is as old as the sun. It is described simply as the illumination which falls on a particular subject. By establishing certain constants, a photographer can solve exposure problems by incident light without regard to the reflective qualities of the subject.

Not the Soapbox Type

Adult Approach Is His Aim

SKIMMING through rehearsals for the hour-long "Studio One" is work, even for actors familiar with one another's tactics. Producer Fletcher Markle (right) uses Anne Burr and Everett Sloan as his acting standbys

By Sonia Stein

IF anybody shoved a soapbox at Fletcher Markle, he'd probably crawl under it instead of on top of it. But don't think he wouldn't make a thumping noise from inside.

Markle is the producer of CBS' "Studio One," a Tuesday night series of hour-long dramas, which has created considerable comment—mostly on its "adult approach."

Snidely tagged a Boy Wonder (in caps) by a national magazine, and accused (rather flatteringly) of showing evidence of his acquaintance with the more elderly Boy Wonder, Orson Welles, 26-year-old Markle doesn't hew to the B. W. line at all.

He's quiet, modest, carries no banner. Even though he tries to be helpful—will answer any question—he has "no fancy platform" and consequently can't sound off about one.

Considering that "Studio One" has been credited with being "bright," "ambitious" and "adult," it's curious to hear the producer say that its primary purpose is to entertain.

Says It's Not Intellectual

MARKLE admits that the program takes "neglected stories, novels and plays" and adapts them for radio "in the most adult, sympathetic fashion possible, leaving out what cannot be done but never watering down." Yet he cringes at the idea that "Studio One" appeals to an intellectual audience.

"The greatest fallacy in the radio industry is judging that the listener has a 12 year old mind," according to Markle. "We get letters from all kinds of people appreciating the type of stories done and suggesting others." This comment, note, from an alleged Boy Wonder—a breed renowned for its intellectual snobbery.

Pale and slim, almost like the prototype of an unsuccessful poet in appearance, Markle is anything but arty.

Even in quoting Don Marquis' observation that "no work of art is ever created by a committee," he got squeamish about such a high-sounding phrase as art, and wanted to substitute "unit of entertainment."

He's for a Sponsor

Far from being an ivory tower radio man even though "Studio One" uses stories "neglected by other similar programs because they don't fit a trade pattern," Markle is all for having a sponsor.

Despite his youth, Markle is solidly grounded in his work. He began acting as a child to put into practice a glibness he'd earned through speech lessons taken to overcome stuttering.

When he left school at the age of 18, he formed an acting unit which was artistically successful but . . . From its financial distresses the group went into a 65-week series of radio plays called "Imagine, Please" which Markle wrote, directed and starred in. Markle's writing fee was $2 per script.

It was during these early years that Markle was "so precocious it nauseates me when I think about it."

In 1942 he wrote a network series, "Baker's Dozen" for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation; Markle is Canadian born and bred and did his early work there.

Made Film With Robinson

ASSIGNED to London as a member of the Canadian Air Force, Markle spent off-duty hours making a film, "Journey Together" with Edward G. Robinson.

The British Minister of Information found something better than this for idle hands, however. Markle was assigned to write and narrate a film for American consumption showing the robot bombs. Markle's "V-1" was nominated for an Academy Award, was released as the Picture of the Month for November, 1944, by the War Activities Committee, and has been shown in 16,000 U. S. theaters.

Home again, Markle wrote another series, "Radio Folio," and in 1946 entered American radio via the "Columbia Workshop" with three scripts, one of which is to be included in an anthology.

Markle writes about half of the adaptations for his current series in addition to producing them, and has done some writing for Hollywood. The film script is based on "Salome" and was done for Orson Welles.

"Studio One" has been accused by job-hungry actors of using a repertory company technique—the same actors every week. Battling with an hour-long script which takes "four or five times the effort of preparing a half hour show," Markle finds it almost essential to use a cast "accustomed to each other's performance characteristics." "Studio One" rehearsals consume about 7 hours whereas "Theater Guild of the Air," using strange casts, puts its actors through 14 to 16 hours of rehearsals.

But even so, Markle points out that he used 50 different actors in the first seven dramas.

No Leaning Backward

FOR future "Studio One" presentations, Markle will continue the "refreshing treatment," but no "leaning over backwards to be special or idiomatic in presentation."

Probably the most surprising thing about Markle is the fact that he's still friendly to the press. Several months ago he was chatting with a reporter about a story he wrote in his youth and called it "the terribly sophisticated stuff you do when you're 20 and think you know everything that goes on in hotel bedrooms." From coast-to-coast and across the shining seas people read that sentence in their news magazine, with the word "think" regrettably missing.

The Record Player

Isaac Stern Records A Beautiful Concert

By Paul Hume

Wieniawski: Violin Concerto in D Minor. Isaac Stern, with New York Philharmonic Orchestra under Efrem Kurtz. Columbia 656. $3.85.

Here is one of the most beautiful recordings of a violin concerto I have ever heard. Years ago this music was recorded by Jascha Heifetz, with the London Philharmonic Orchestra, for Victor. Now there is a brilliant successor to that recording.

Columbia has given perfect balance to soloist and orchestra, and Stern plays the music with wonderful feeling for its sumptuous lines. His technique is brilliant and pliable so that the nuances of the slow movement emerge with melting appeal.

Kurtz is one of those marvelous conductors whose accompaniments are models of ensemble precision. Engineering, surfaces and all mechanical details are superb. The music is up to you, of course, coming straight out of the nineteenth century's most juicy era.

Liszt: Mefisto Waltz; also: Wolf-Ferrari: Secret of Susanne Overture. New York Philharmonic Orchestra under Artur Rodzinski. Columbia X-281. $2.85.

Until now, the Boston Symphony recording with Koussevitsky has been the chief competition for attention in the Mefisto Waltz field. Here is its superior. Rodzinski has precisely the flair for this, plus the tenderness for the sensuous moment when Mefisto turns his fiddle to thoughts of love. Moreover, there is that marvelous use of rubato with the whole orchestra which makes the climax of the piece so powerful. Surfaces in my set were less quiet than those of the Wieniawski concerto, but the recording of the orchestra is brilliant. The Secret of Susanne overtures receives unsurpassable playing in terrific spirit.

Wagner: Arias from Lohengrin, Tannhauser, Meistersinger and Parsifal. Torsten Ralf with Metropolitan Opera Orchestra under Fritz Busch. Columbia 634. $4.85.

Some years ago a record reviewer and music critic in Chicago said of Torsten Ralf, ". . . he phrases with the subtlety of a meat cleaver . . ." That unenviable reputation is not greatly changed by Columbia's new album of Wagnerian arias by the tenor who opened at the Metropolitan two seasons ago.

He is careless about pitch in moments where the vocal line moves rapidly. His diction is often mushy, and his delivery without any nobility or grace. Most successful in quiet, sustained passages, he sounds best in the Tannhauser and Parsifal arias, but in nothing is he to be desired over other tenors who have recorded these same scenes.

The recordings are technically fine, with the Met orchestra sounding as well as it ever does under the musicianly hands of Fritz Busch. Engineering and surfaces are good.

Shakespeare: Henry V. Laurence Olivier, with chorus and Philharmonia Orchestra under William Walton. Victor 1128. $4.85.

Here at last is Sir Laurence in some of the great moments of the play or the film, as you chose to regard it. Not confined to the part of prologue or young Harry, he lends his rich voice and expanding art to speeches of Burgundy and others in a set designed to give some thread of the entire narrative.

The music is that which Walton composed for the film, performed by the Philharmonia Orchestra of London and an extremely competent chorus. The composer conducts his own writing, which is some of the best in the history of motion pictures. We are only sorry for one thing: with so much material from which to choose, why is the album not twice the length of this eight-sided affair? Eight records from Henry would sell or the film is no prognosticator of sales. Fortunately there is a single HMV disc of additional music from the film which can be bought in out of town shops.

Olivier's voice is as expressive on records as in the movies, or on the stage. Some think its quality slightly different. I was struck with its similarity to my memory's image of it. By all means buy Henry V for music, drama, and a reminder of one of the great moments in picture history. Shakespeare had something to do with it, too.

Godfrey Caught Going English

A British comedy writer, Ted Kavanaugh, dropped into the Arthur Godfrey show to catch some American humor for a series of articles on America for a London paper.

What did he find? Godfrey doing a preview of Noel Coward's forthcoming radio show with commercials:

"Pepsi Cola dahts directly to the mahk . . . Rinso alabastah . . . Rinso alabastah! Jolly little madrigal . . . Beckoning all blighters! Beckoning all blighters . . to Barnard's . . . Seventh Avenue and Trafalgar Square . . . the only store of its ilk in the Empah!"

21 Years After

Opening of Lincoln Papers to Be on Air

CBS Producer Robert Heller (left) and Librarian of Congress Luther Evans discuss plans for a broadcast from the Library Saturday when the Abraham Lincoln papers are unsealed on the 21st anniversary of the death of Lincoln's son

"NEW Light on Lincoln?" The first of two CBS documentary broadcasts based on the unsealing of the Robert Todd Lincoln collection of Abraham Lincoln's papers, will be presented Saturday at 3:30 p. m. over WTOP-CBS.

This collection, has been the source of conjecture among historians for many years. Robert Lincoln deposited them in the Library of Congress in 1919, and deed them to the library in 1923 with the strict proviso that they be kept sealed until 21 years after his death, which occurred on July 26, 1926.

The Robert Todd Lincoln collection has had a controversial background. Regarding himself as chief, and perhaps sole curator of his father's memory, the younger Lincoln, himself a successful businessman and lawyer, guarded the papers from all but a privileged few.

After presenting "New Light on Lincoln?", the CBS documentary staff will examine the estimated 12,000 documents in the collection. Their findings will form the basis of a second documentary unit Lincoln presentation on a date to be announced Saturday.

Dress Drapers Sub for Winchell

Making a summertime bow to the fact that it's the ladies who use their lotion, Jergens will offer six fashion designers to replace Walter Winchell, now on vacation from his WMAL-ABC Sunday night assignment. Valentina will start the hemline gossip tonight at 9, with John Frederics, Schiaparelli, Mainbocher, Carrie Munn and Claire McCardle lined up for future weeks. Ed Thorgenson, officially on duty to discuss sports, will give his views on 1947 fashion. Ben Grauer will report whatever news is left over.

Eddie Dowling, actor and producer, noted for his star-making ability, will present "The Big Break" beginning tonight at 10:30 over WRC-NBC. Much as it sounds like a Grade B jail-break movie, it's a program devoted to new talent. Some established talent will appear, too, with Mary Martin scheduled for tonight.

The Washington Opera Guild is also inaugurating a weekly program over WQQW tonight at 6:45 to give an opportunity to young American artists.

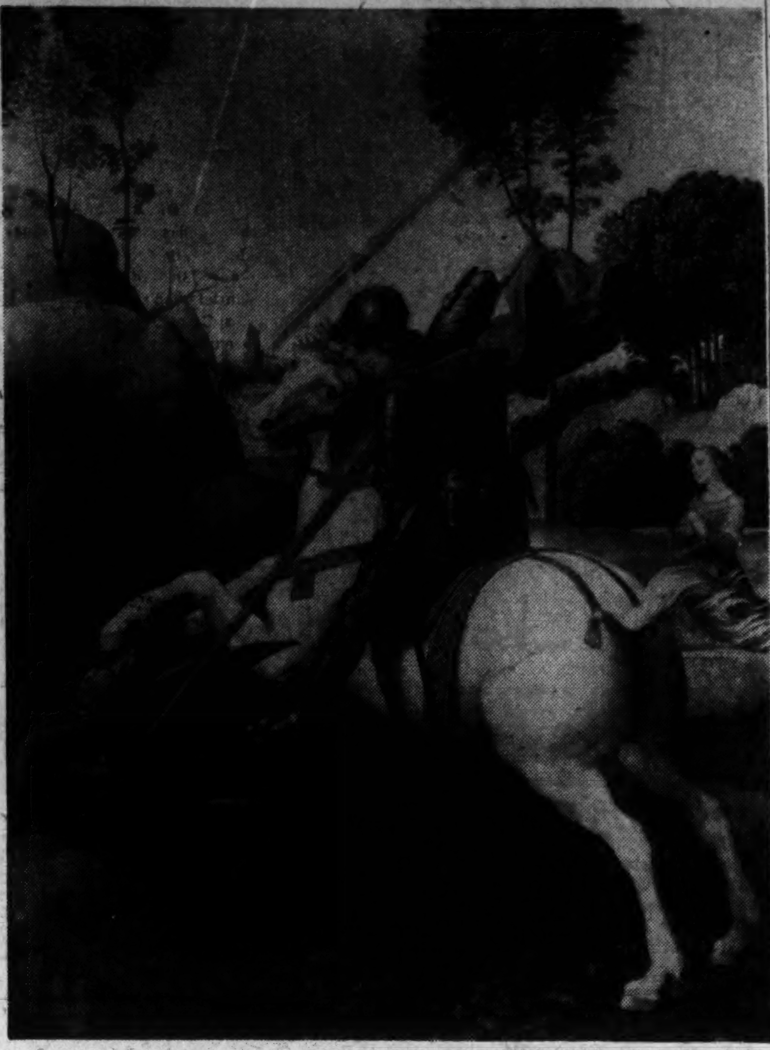
A Worthwhile Experiment

Televising of Art Falls Short



ST. GEORGE AND THE DRAGON, BY RAPHAEL
. . . televised from the National Gallery

By Jane Watson Crane

SINCE 1939, when NBC's James Rowland Angell first publicly affirmed that "television can do for the visual arts what radio has done for music," art people have been looking hopefully for the evidence.

Last Saturday night the local ether carried not only a thunderstorm but the National Gallery's first art-telecast. Introducing the program, Director David Finley hailed it as a turning point in the history of the gallery and reiterated the faith of 1939. He then turned the half hour program over to the education department.

There have been previous art-telecasts, but none so ambitious or ingenious as this. It was the idea of the department's chief, Lamont Moore, who wrote the script, to dramatize the story of one painting in the collection, Raphael's "St. George and the Dragon," through a kind of shadow play. Once in the possession of Catharine of Russia, the painting passed through many hands before it came to the United States, through purchase in 1932 by Andrew Mellon.

The Duke of Urbino, who commissioned the painting, Henry VII of England, who received it as a gift, and the artist himself were televised in shadow as the story progressed.

Reproduced Full Scale

THE speaking parts were taken by NBC personnel, but the gallery staff took the shadow parts (in some cases as many as three in the course of the half hour). The proceedings, which took place in the National Gallery, involved three separate rooms. Speakers with sound apparatus were stationed in one room, and four selected paintings, which could not be removed from the air conditioning, in another. One of the gallery's big unused spaces housed the shadow stage. The telecast was beamed from the roof of the gallery to a tower at the Wardman Park Hotel and thence to the receivers.

The Raphael painting singled out for the gallery's first television venture is very small, which made it possible to reproduce in full in the scale required. A beautifully integrated work, it has firm outlines, but also considerable detail. Unfortunately, it did not reproduce well in television, nor did the incidental works—a portrait of Catiglione, the Houdon bust of Voltaire, and the Holbein Edward VI. The details scarcely came through at all, and the forms lost a great deal in transmission. It is interesting that a small detail of the Raphael, a closeup to show the signature, which was taken from an enlarged photograph, came out much better than the painting taken directly with the television camera. Color television, of course, is out for the present, although studios officials say that that angle is being worked on.

New Series Running

NBC is now running a series of 10-minute telecasts illustrating methods of painting, a far less complicated problem for the medium, where action offsets any lack of clarity in the image. Since the first art television program over W2XBS in May, 1939, this studio has been experimenting in the art field. Paintings at the New York World's Fair were shown by television, and the Museum of Modern Art sponsored a series the same year. There was also launched a series to promote art books by television.

The big advantage of television, so far at least, would seem to be its immediacy. If the openings of art exhibitions, for example, were televised, it would have great publicity value to the artists. Another thing they would undoubtedly welcome, would be the chance to demonstrate their work in process and to discuss the finished product.

As an experiment, the National Gallery's venture was fascinating, but the results did not prove that the medium was up to it. A motion picture presentation would be more satisfactory, and have the added advantage that it could be preserved. When the half-hour telecast was over Saturday night, it had vanished for all time.

Art Notes

Britannica Chooses Fourteen for Annual

PAINTINGS by 14 Western and Southwestern artists have been chosen to form Encyclopedia Britannica's second rotating annual, supplementing the main Britannica's collection of 127 paintings by contemporary Americans. The exhibition will be at the Springfield (Mass.) Museum of Fine Arts, from August 1 to 15. Later it will be shown with the main collection and also as a traveling unit by itself. Massachusetts Institute of Technology is the second stop on its schedule. The main collection is now on a five-year tour of American art museums.

The Western show consists of 14 paintings, leased by the firm with an option to purchase. Among the artists represented are S. Macdonald Wright, Barse Miller, Rico Lebrun, Richard Haines, Phil Dike and Jean Ames of California; Everett Spruce of Texas, Theodore van Soelen of New Mexico and Marvin Cone of Iowa.

While the "regional" aspect of this group has nothing to do with subject matter, it is salutary that its tour begins in the East, where new developments in painting in the West are too little known.

SUMMER art exhibitions report exceptionally good attendance. One of the oldest established, the Lyme Art Association at Old Lyme, Conn., will continue its show through August 17. Work includes portraits by W. Langdon Kihn and Abram Poole,, landscapes and genre subjects by Eugene Higgins, Guy Wiggins and others. Thomas Nason, print maker, has several entries, as has the sculptor, Henry Kreis.

THE Watkins Gallery of American University is showing creative drawings by the art faculty through August 15. Included in the exhibition which shows a variety of approaches and techniques, is work by Sarah Baker, William Calfee, Robert Gates, Boris Margo and Leo Steppat.

Associated American Artists Announce 13 Prize Winners

Two etchings and a lithograph won for three artists this week $1000 each in the second annual national print competition of Associated American Artists. The etchings are "The Big Haystack," by Luigi Lucioni of Vermont, and "Fatherless," by Stephen Csoka of New York. The lithograph is "Self Portrait—55 East Division Street," by Ivan le Lorraine Albright of Chicago.

Purchase prizes of $200 were awarded to 10 others: Lawrence Kupferman, Robert Von Neumann, Harry Sternberg, Ralph Hammer Scharf, Gwen Lux, Adolf Dehn, Ernest Fiene, Edward Chavez, Frederico Castellon and Doel Reed. The prize winners are among 150 prints on exhibition at Associated Galleries, New York, to August 15.

The Washington Philatelist

Philatelic Agency Sets Record $3,331,291 Sale

By William M. Stuart

SALES of new postage stamps through the Postoffice Department's philatelic agency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, amounted to $3,331,291.42, an all-time high and an increase of $310,599.06 over the previous fiscal year, also a record year.

These impressive figures constitute a strong argument why Congress should heed appeals of the department for increased appropriations in order to render better service.

The agency was established a quarter of a century ago and the first fiscal year, 1922, showed receipts of $20,906. There has been a steady growth, the first million-dollar year being 1935 when sales totaled $2,340,484, due mostly to the so-called "Farley Sheets."

With the exception of the war years 1942 and 1943, the years 1936 to 1947 recorded sales of over a million dollars annually.

As has often been said, the stock at the agency is select and acceptable for any collection. The average philatelist has no fault to find with condition but there are those who still insist that every stamp should be measured by hand for centering and its color guaranteed perfect.

New Pacific Air Mail

AIR MAIL service will be inaugurated by Northwest Airlines, Inc., on route F A M-28 to Shanghai and Manila from Minneapolis and St. Paul, Seattle and Anchorage, Alaska. Air-mail postage rate is 25 cents a half ounce or 10 cents each for air letters. No official cachet will be provided owing to lack of time, but covers received at the Minneapolis, St. Paul, Seattle or Anchorage postoffices for first flights will be honored. Care should be taken in addressing covers.

Pan American Airways inaugurates a first flight on F A M route 18 from New York to Damas (Damascus), Syria, today. The present air-mail rate is 25 cents a half ounce or 10 cents each for air letters. A special cachet will be applied.

China 'Inflates' Stamps

CURRENCY INFLATION has caused China to issue a new series of stamps. All denominations are marked in Chinese dollars. The design shows the entrance to the mausoleum of Dr. Sun Yat-sen in Nanking.

The values of the five stamps in the set are as follows: $100 green, $200 blue, $250 red, $350 brown and $400 burgundy. There have also been stamps in demominations of $1000, $3000 and $5000.

The 25-cent air mail stamp will be released July 30 at San Francisco. This denomination is intended for use on mail destined to Pacific and Asiatic areas and parts of Africa. The 15-cent air mail will be first-day in New York City on August 20 and the 10-cent air mail will be later in August.

The Collectors Club, Branch 5, SPA, is holding regular auctions at its Tuesday meetings at Pythian Temple, 1042 9th st. nw., and all collectors are invited. At the July 13 meeting the new president, Ellery Denison, appointed the following committees: Membership, Mrs. Julia Smith, Max Wiggins and Dr. G. G. Fraser; housing, C. H. Vaughan, Paul Weeks and Ernest Woodhouse; program and bulletin, William M. Stuart.

Old Fort Niagara Beckons Tourists

Albany, July 19.—In New York State's western vacation land stands old Fort Niagara. The French explorer LaSalle built a fort at the Lake Ontario end of the Niagara River in 1678, and his successors expanded it into the most powerful post on what was then the key point of the Great Lakes. Possession passed with the fortunes of war from French garrisons to British and then to American.

Near Niagara Falls is Whirlpool Park.

Picnicking Made Easy

Here's How to Keep From Roughing It

THIS PORTABLE oven, so simple and convenient, should be a particular delight to the chef who is a little on the lazy side. You set up the tripod first, then— No, first you set the oven on the ground and— Oh, read the article!

IN SEARCH of cool shade, the kind cast by trees in the country and umbrellas on the shore? Before you put playsuits on the children, the food in the car and head for coolness, here are some fittings to consider for a more pleasurable outing.

There is something about cooking out of doors that appeals to many men, even to those who shrug a disinterested shoulder at performing in the kitchen. The portable grill pictured here is an ideal stove for the male chef. It combines a roasting oven with a grill so he can demonstrate his technique on a wide range of foods, from barbecued ribs to potatoes, corn-on-the-cob and coffee.

Hot From the Oven

THE OVEN encircles the grate. When the fire is kindled on the grate, you may put into the oven water to be heated for coffee, or corn-on-the-cob or potatoes to bake. There is a spout on the side of the oven to dispense the water when it is ready for coffee. The cover of the oven is detachable so that baked goods can be removed easily.

The grill is adjustable to cook steaks of varying thicknesses. Pre-cooked meat can be suspended from the aluminum tripod for heating. As the meat warms, it can be sliced from the bottom and the meat lowered over the grate after each well-warmed succulent slice is removed.

When the grill is used in the backyard, the grate-oven combination hangs from the tripot so the grass won't be singed. And when it is taken to the country, it proves a good traveler. The lightweight tripod can be telescoped to half its size; the oven grill has a handle for carrying.

Worthy companion pieces to this grill include plastic plates and tumbler sets. A 10-ounce tumbler rests in the center of each plate, held on by a ridged base. The plates are well sized to hold steaks, Dagwood sandwiches, potato salad and all the trimmings for a picnic lunch.

A 14-piece aluminum picnic set will take care of your every cooking need. This sturdy ensemble has recently reappeared on store shelves. If you had one of the pre-war sets you will know how practical they are for many years of picnics and camping trips.

There are four plates, four cups, two stew pans, a coffee pot, two skillets and one bucket. Being aluminum, they make a lightweight stack of picnic utensils.

If you were an Eagle Scout, this isn't for you. But for those who have found that lighting a fire can be a series of embarrassing retries while the hungry crowd looks on, smokeless fire lighters can be a means of saving time as well as face.

The Way With a Flame

THESE long, square tallows are ignited with a match. Then you can hold one corner while kindling the fire. These lighters will not flare up or burn in a hurry.

Sand on the beach is a fine thing; and in the picnic lunch is something else. A new bag takes care of that uncomfortable situation. It is a leather-like zipper kit that holds two 1-quart vacuum bottles and an airtight sandwich container, large enough for about eight sandwiches and cookies. The top of each vacuum bottle holds four plastic cups. A divider between the sandwich container and bottles keeps them from juggling around, and when the bottles and sandwiches are removed, the divider can be slipped out and the kit used as a beach bag. The zipper bag can stand upright on brass knobs. There are two handles for carrying.

Wet Suits Go Here

ANOTHER new zipper bag for beach fans is insulated with Fiberglas and covered with waterproof material. It will keep bottles cold for from four to six hours, keeps food warm and it is planned for the damp life it is likely to lead on the beach; you can throw wet bathing suits and towels in because this bag is protected from mildew or any other bad effects of moisture. Roomy and light, this bag could hold your togs for a weekend at the shore. It comes in black, red and brown.

Relax and soak up the sun on a new, lightweight folding beach loungette. Wet clothes, raindrops and splashes from the ocean will not leave the cushion limp and bedraggled; it is covered with a moisture-proof fabric and insulated with Fiberglas.

The cushioned-aluminum backrest is adjustable so you can sit up to read or recline with the backrest at a comfortable slant. There are pockets at the back to hold books, cigarettes and glasses. This folding beach loungette is so light one finger can hold its weight.

Another canvas-covered beach mat folds into a compact 1½-foot package. Straps hold the lightweight bundle secure and provide handles for carrying.

Concerts, Swimming, Races Head List at Ventnor City

Ventnor City, N. J., July 19—Sunday night concerts, beach patrol swimming and boat races, amateur shows for kiddies and daily softball games head the list of July events for summer visitors here.

Concerts directed by Vincent E. Speciale attract several hundred music lovers to the auditorium of Ventnor Pier each Sunday night, while on Monday evenings visiting youngsters join localites in putting on song and dance shows on the pier.

Shuffleboard and tennis courts maintained by the city on the beachfront are proving popular with sports enthusiasts.

Ventnor fishing pier is the mecca of Ventnor anglers throughout the week and on Sundays, when special contests sponsored by the Ventnor Fishing Club are scheduled.

Youngsters between 10 and 14 have been invited to join the Ventnor City League's softball teams, which play Mondays through Fridays.

Rounding out the recreation program here are a one-mile swim July 26 and the annual boat race August 9, with Ventnor lifeguards competing for the resort championship.

New Catering Manager at Greenbrier

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., July 19.—Max A. Haering of New York City is new manager of catering of the Greenbrier Hotel and Cottages here.

Haering has been a hotel man all his life, starting in his parents' Metropole-Monopole, in Basle. His career included tours in the Ritz in Paris, the Carlton and Grosvenor in London, and in Lucerne, Frankfort, Zurich, New York City, Miami Beach, Cleveland and Flushing, N. Y.

Glacier Park Called Hay Fever Haven

The excellence of Glacier National Park as a refuge for hay fever victims in late summer and early fall has been established by scientific survey, according to E. H. Whitlock, Great Northern Railway, general agent, passenger department, here.

Whitlock says a pollen survey conducted last year shows "that if the total amount of ragweed pollen found during the entire season in Glacier Park had occurred on one day the degree of pollen contamination would have been negligible."

The survey developed that no ragweeds grow in Glacier and that analysis of air samples taken there showed that more than 80 per cent of the air was entirely free of ragweed.

Tough Dollars for Operators

Back-to-the-Horse Yen Booms Dude Outfits in Colorado

By Bob Considine

GRAND LAKE, Colo., July 19 (INS).—A kid of ours, who has been affecting a bow-legged gait and a "howdy, podner" for weeks in anticipation, just rode up a Rocky Mountain trail from Holzwarth ranch on his first pack trip.

This boy didn't even see a tree until he was fairly well along in childhood. About the only horse he had previously sat was a house-broken pony in Central Park. But he was sure he could ride, under the intoxication of months of training at Western movies, and, oddly, he can.

This back-to-the-ranch flame has never been doused in the hearts of millions of city folks of all ages. It is a genealogical phenomenon that has created enough dude ranches in this incomparably picturesque State alone to do a two-million-dollar-a-year business.

It's 9000 Feet Up

THE HOLZWARTH place hides in North Fork Valley, 9000 feet up the Rockies.

The current clients are a small business man from Texas, an accountant from Ohio, a school teacher from New Jersey, a retired couple from Minnesota, a druggist from Kansas City, and a banker from Indianapolis.

It has housed in its comfortable log cabins visitors from every State and several foreign countries; people who have saved for months for a week of simple living, diplomats from Washington and back-to-Colorado celebrities such as Charles McCabe, publisher of the New York Daily Mirror, and Eddie Eagan, the Colorado boy who became a Rhodes scholar, world's amateur heavyweight champion and is now chairman of the New York State Athletic Commission.

Primarily it is a place where 75 per cent of the clients have never been on horseback but feel sure they can ride. They want to get away from their cities and look at a mountain, inhale the clean air, get back to the horse.

But It's a Tough Dollar

DUDE-RANCHING is tough dollar for the operators. They must make their year's money in the three months of summer when white-collar people are on the move. Johnny Holzwarth built his entire establishment—more than a dozen buildings—by hand. He cut the lumber and skinned it and put it together. He and his Phi Beta Kappa wife and their growing children work long hours to give the guests a little more than they pay for.

The help around ranches like Holzwarth's is both plentiful and colorful. Girls working their way through college take care of serving and the housework. College boys help Johnny and Al, the other cowboy, care for the horses.

Major domo of the kitchen is Beulah Welch, a forthright lady who, after she finishes her long day with the pots and pans, brings out an accordion she calls her "stomach steinway" and sends the tenderfeet off to bed . . . At an hour when they'd normally just be dressing to go out.

Our kid, who would bellyache grievously if asked to clean up his room at home, enthusiastically manicures two large stalls between rides.

End of travelogue.

N. Y.'s Birthplace

New York State was "born" in the old court house at White Plains, Westchester County, where the Declaration of Independence was first accepted by a public assembly, says the "Guide to Southern New York," published by the New York State Department of Commerce.

Around the Bridge Table

D. C. Players Shoot For World Titles

By Marian H. Barre

BRIDGE enthusiasts from all over the United States will congregate in Brooklyn August 2 to 10, when the twenty-first annual summer session of the National Contract Bridge Championships will be held at the Hotel St. George.

Events carying world championship titles include the masters pairs, the master mixed teams and the master teams-of-four. National titles for men's and women's pairs and amateur teams-of-four will also be decided. In addition, there will be games every afternoon and evening for players who do not wish to compete in the championship events.

Among the ranking Washington players who will vie for the coveted titles are Mrs. Marianne Boschan, Mrs. Frederick Eberson, Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Steinberg, John J. Parrish, Charles C. Johnson, J. G. Stone and Miller Roberts.

The first session of the Federal League's annual mixed pair championship, held on July 8, found the following pairs leading the field: Mrs. Frederick Eberson-J. G. Stone, first; Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Steinberg, second, and Mrs. Marianne Boschan-John J. Parrish, third. The second and final session will be held at Pierce Hall on July 22. There will also be an open pair game that night.

Lynchburg Look-In

A SMALL group of Washington players journeyed to Lynchburg last weekend to participate in the city championships. The Tubbs brothers, Lewis and Lloyd, finished third in the masters' pairs game.

Winners of the Agriculture Bridge Club's monthly master point game, held at the Euclid Studios on July 2, were Mrs. Dora Schwartz-Col. John Geddes, first; Mrs. Virginia Dye-Mr. Shinnick, second, and John Moore-William S. Benedict, third.

Another set of master point awards went to the following winners the same evening at the Capitol City Chess Club: north-south, John J. Parrish-David Murray, first; Mrs. J. B. G. Custis-Dr. J. V. Waits, second; east-west, Mrs. C. M. Fisher-Miller Roberts, first; Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Tingley, second. The second session of the club's mixed pair championship, which began on July 8, will be held tomorrow evening at the Hotel Gordon.

New Senior Masters

MASTER point awards at the recent Annapolis tournament brought Herbert J. Gerst of Norfolk, who is well known among local players, into the ranks of life masters, and Mrs. Marianne Boschan of Washington into the senior master lists.

A master point game will be held at the Euclid Studios, 1355 Euclid st., on July 26 under the auspices of the Women's Auxiliary of the Washington Bridge League.

Maine Skunk Hunt a Success

Rangeley Lake, Me., July 19.—Ain't been so much fun down Maine since the lassie moose mistook an air raid siren for her lover's call to arms.

The first skunk hunt in the Pine Tree State was such a sockeroo that they say it's going to be an annual affair from here-on-in with brass bands and all that.

"I wouldn't have missed it," giggled one grizzled old trapper, "for 50 scents."

Skunks are a bit of a problem in the resort area of inland Maine. So this year, to speed mass migration of the "burrowing carnivora" in the Rangeley Lake region, W. Scott Peirsol, general manager of the Rangeley Sheraton Hotel, solicited the services of Boston's fanciest debutantes and their escorts. Their weapons for the fray included wicker baskets (you throw the basket over the skunk's head, or if you prefer, over your own); flashlights (not too far front, please), and pitchforks (by process of elimination, since nothing in Emily Post recommends the use of any other fork as de rigeur).

A Skunk Hunters' Ball climaxed three days of unrivaled, unfettered frolic.

Idaho Skeet Shooting

One of Sun Valley's most popular warm-weather sports is skeet shooting. An instructor is provided without charge at the Idaho resort.
